19 STATEMENT OF THE CASE

20 On May 19, 2005 Defendant filed his opening brief with the Nevada Supreme 21 Court. On June 17, 2005, the State submitted its answering brief. On September 30, 22 2005, the State requested leave to file a supplemental briefing. The Court granted the 23 State's motion and its request that supplemental briefing be ordered on the question of 24 whether McConnell v. State, 102 P.3d 606 (Nev. 2004) should be applied retroactively to Defendant's case.

25 STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

26 On February 18, 1992, Michael Rippo and his girlfriend, Diana Hunt, went to 27 the Katie Arms Apartment Complex to meet victim Lauri Jacobson, who was home 28 alone. Rippo and Jacobson injected themselves with morphine for recreational

1 purposes. Shortly thereafter victim Denise Lizzi arrived, and she and Jacobson went 2 outside for approximately twenty minutes. While Jacobson and Lizzi were outside, 3 Rippo closed the apartment curtains and the window and asked Hunt to give him a 4 stun gun she had in her purse. Rippo then made a phone call.

5 When Jacobson and Lizzi returned to the apartment, they went into the 6 bathroom. Rippo brought Hunt a bottle of beer and told her that when Jacobson 7 answered the phone, Hunt should hit Jacobson with the bottle so that Rippo could rob 8 Lizzi. A few minutes later the phone rang, and Jacobson came out of the bathroom to 9 answer it. Hunt hit Jacobson on the back of her head with the bottle causing 10 Jacobson to fall to the floor. Rippo and Lizzi were yelling in the bathroom, and Hunt 11 could hear the stun gun being fired. Hunt witnessed Rippo wrestle Lizzi across the 12 hall into a big closet. Hunt ran to the closet and observed Rippo sitting on top of 13 Lizzi and stunning her with the stun gun. Hunt then went to the living room and 14 helped Jacobson sit up. Rippo came out of the closet holding a knife which he had 15 used to cut the cords from several appliances, told Jacobson to lie down, tied her 16 hands and feet, and put a bandanna in her mouth.

17 Hunt next saw Rippo in the closet with Lizzi. Rippo had tied Lizzi's hands and 18 feet. At this point, a friend of Jacobson's approached the apartment, knocked on the 19 door, and called out for Jacobson. Rippo put a gag in Lizzi's mouth. Jacobson was 20 still gagged and apparently unable to answer. After the friend left, Rippo began 21 stunning Jacobson with the stun gun. He placed a cord or belt-type object through 22 the ties on Jacobson's feet and wrists, and dragged her across the floor to the closet.
23 As Rippo dragged her, Jacobson appeared to be choking. Hunt began to vomit and 24 next remembered hearing an odd noise coming from the closet. She observed Rippo 25 with his knee in the small of Lizzi's back, pulling on an object he had placed around 26 her neck.

27 When Hunt accused Rippo of choking the women, Rippo told her that he had 28 only temporarily cut off their air supply, and that Hunt and Rippo had to leave before

1 the two women woke up. Rippo wiped down the apartment with a rag before leaving.
2 While cleaning up, Rippo went into the closet and removed Lizzi's boots and pants.
3 He explained to Hunt that he needed to remove Lizzi's pants because he had bled on 4 them.

5 Later that evening, Rippo called Hunt and told her to meet him at a friend's 6 shop. When Hunt arrived, Rippo was there with Thomas Simms, the owner of the 7 shop, and another unidentified man. Rippo told Hunt that he had stolen a car for her 8 and that she needed to obtain some paperwork on it. Hunt believed the car, a maroon 9 Nissan, had belonged to Lizzi.

10 The next day, on February 19, 1992, Hunt and Rippo purchased a pair of 11 sunglasses using a gold Visa card. Rippo told Hunt that he had purchased an air 12 compressor and tools on a Sears credit card that morning. Later that day, Hunt, who 13 was scared of Rippo and wanted to "get away from him[.]" went through Rippo's 14 wallet in search of money. Hunt was unable to find any money, but she took a gold 15 Visa card belonging to Denny Mason, Lizzi's boyfriend, from Rippo's wallet. Hunt 16 did not know who Mason was. Around February 29, 1992, Rippo confronted Hunt.
17 Hunt suggested to Rippo that they turn themselves in to the LVMPD, but Rippo 18 refused, telling Hunt that he had returned to Jacobson's apartment, cut the women's 19 throats, and jumped up and down on them.

20 The medical examiner, Dr. Giles Sheldon Green, who performed autopsies on 21 Lizzi and Jacobson, also testified at Rippo's trial. Dr. Green testified that Lizzi had 22 been found with a sock in her mouth, secured by a gag that encircled her head. The 23 sock had been pushed back so far that part of it was underneath Lizzi's tongue, 24 blocking her airway. Pieces of cloth were found tied around each of her wrists. Dr.
25 Green testified that Lizzi's numerous injuries were consistent with manual and ligature 26 strangulation.

27 Dr. Green testified that Jacobson died from asphyxiation due to manual 28 strangulation. Dr. Green found no traces of drugs in Jacobson's system. Neither of 1 the womens' bodies revealed stun gun marks.

2 Thomas Simms also testified at trial that Rippo arrived at his shop on February 3 18, 1992, with a burgundy Nissan. When Simms asked about the ownership of the 4 car, Rippo responded that someone had died for it. Rippo gave Simms several music
5 cassette tapes, many bearing the initials D.L., and an empty suitcase with Lauri 6 Jacobson's name tag. On February 21, 1992, Simms heard a news report that two 7 women had been killed and that one of them was named Denise Lizzi. On February 8 26, 1992, Simms met Rippo in a parking lot to return a bottle of morphine that Rippo 9 had left in Simms' refrigerator. When Simms inquired about the murders, Rippo 10 admitted that he had "choked those two bitches to death" and that he had killed the 11 first woman accidentally so he had to kill the other one.

12 The jury found Rippo guilty of two counts of first-degree murder, and one 13 count each of robbery and unauthorized use of a credit card. After the penalty 14 hearing, the jury sentenced Rippo to death, finding six aggravating factors: (1) the 15 murders were committed by a person under sentence of imprisonment; (2) the 16 murders were committed by a person who was previously convicted of a felony 17 involving the use or threat of violence to another person; (3) the murders were 18 committed while the person was engaged in the commission of or an attempt to 19 commit robbery; (4) the murders involved torture; (5) the murders were committed 20 while the person was engaged in the commission of or an attempt to commit burglary; 21 and (6) the murders were committed while the person was engaged in the commission 22 of or an attempt to commit kidnapping.

23 ARGUMENT

24 I

25 THIS COURT MAY PROPERLY CONSIDER THE RETROACTIVITY OF 26 THE MCCONNELL DECISION IN THE CONTEXT OF THIS APPEAL.

27 Although neither the retroactivity issue nor the specific concerns addressed in 28 McConnell were expressly raised or litigated in the proceedings below, it is primarily 1 a question of law that does not involve factual determinations outside the record. The 2 Court, per its discretion, “may consider an issue first raised on appeal when the issue 3 presented is purely one of law and the opposing party will suffer no prejudice as result 4 of the failure to raise the issue below.” United States v. Hernandez-Valdovinos, 352

5 F.3d 1243, 1248 n.4 (2003) (citing United States v. Echavarria-Escobar, 270 F.3d 6 1265, 1268 (9th Cir. 2001)).

7 The State is aware of the Court’s concern with maintaining the integrity of 8 procedural bars, which in turn maintain the integrity of the finality of cases. The 9 Nevada Supreme Court has been under regular attack by various petitioners who 10 claim Nevada does not consistently apply its procedural bars. See, e.g., State v. Riker, 11 121 Nev. Adv. Op. 25 (2005); Pellegrini v. State, 117 Nev. 860, 34 P.3d 519 (2001).
12 However, as long as the State rules are consistently applied, the federal courts must 13 show deference to the State court’s application of procedural bars. Loveland v.
14 Hatcher, 231 F.3d 640 (9th Cir.2000) (denying claim made that Nevada does not 15 consistently apply NRS 34.726(1), the one year limit for filing habeas petition); 16 Petrocelli v. Angelone, 248 F.3d 877 (9th Cir. 2001) (holding that the Nevada 17 Supreme Court had consistently applied the procedural bar in NRS 34.800).

18 In this case no purpose would be served by requiring Rippo to submit his claim 19 of retroactivity in a successive petition where the question of the validity of an 20 aggravating circumstance amounts to a “fundamental miscarriage of justice” and 21 “actual innocence” of the death penalty are called into question. Hogan v. Warden, 22 109 Nev. 952, 960, 860 P.2d 710, 716 (1993). The Court has previously recognized 23 this standard can be met when the Defendant may be ineligible for the death penalty.
24 See Jones v. State, 101 Nev. 573, 580, 707 P.2d 1128, 1133 (1985) (change in law 25 raised constitutional issues that might invalidate a defendant’s sentence of death); 26 Mazzan v. Warden, 112 Nev. 838, 842, 921 P.2d 920, 922 (1996); Hill v. State, 114 27 Nev. 169, 953 P.2d 1077 (1998). This is the situation facing Defendant and an 28 estimated forty (40) other death row inmates from Clark County alone, all of whom

1 had at least one felony-aggravator found against them. All these death row inmates 2 have “good cause” to file a new, successive petition based on McConnell because it 3 constitutes a fundamental change in law not previously available to them and are 4 “prejudiced” if McConnell is held to be retroactive because it would invalidate the 5 felony-aggravators upon which their death sentence was based.

6 Moreover, as the issue is before the Court presently, it is reasonable that the 7 Court address McConnell now within Defendant’s case rather than have it remanded 8 for consideration of retroactivity, only for the appellate process to return all parties to 9 the present point. This Court has recognized that within federal limitations it is “free 10 to choose the degree of retroactivity or prospectivity which we believe appropriate to 11 the particular rule under consideration” Colwell v. State, 188 Nev. 807, 818, 59 12 P.3d 463, 471 (2003). Accordingly, it is an exercise in futility for the lower court 13 judges to speculate and attempt to divine this Court’s intent for the retroactivity of the 14 McConnell decision. No evidentiary hearing is required below where the factual 15 prerequisites to determining application of McConnell are already part of the record: 16 namely, whether the same felony was used to support a theory of felony-murder as 17 well as to aggravate it to death eligibility. This Court could have decided retroactivity 18 in the McConnell opinion at the time it announced the new rule but simply chose not 19 to. Doing so now is not only permissible, but is advisable in order to avoid a waste of 20 judicial resources and time on a discretionary decision of this Court which has 21 potentially undermined the finality of most of Nevada’s death row population.

22 II.

23 MCCONNELL SHOULD NOT APPLY RETROACTIVELY

24 Defendant is seeking to vacate his sentence of death. In support of his 25 argument Defendant is relying on the Nevada Supreme Court’s rule espoused in 26 McConnell v. State, 102 P.3d 606 (Nev. 2004), rehearing denied McConnell v. State, 27 107 P.3d 1287 (Nev. 2005), and asks this court to apply this rule retroactively to his 28 case. It is the State’s position, however, that the Nevada Supreme Court enunciated a

1 new rule of criminal procedure that should not be applied retroactively to a finalized
2 case on collateral review. Further, the rule does not fit within any exception 3 prescribed in Colwell; therefore, Defendant's sentence of death should stand.

4 A. Retroactivity Analysis

5 In Colwell v. State, 118 Nev. 807, 59 P.3d 463 (2002) the Nevada Supreme 6 Court adopted, with modification, the United States Supreme Court's three-step 7 retroactivity analysis under Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 109 S.Ct. 1060 (1989) 8 (plurality opinion).

9 The first step is to determine whether the subsequent interpretation by the court 10 established a "new rule." Unlike Teague, Colwell's definition of what constitutes a 11 new rule is more strictly construed. See, Clem v. State, 81 P.3d 521 (2004). As per 12 examples in Colwell, a rule is new "if the decision announcing it overrules precedent; 13 or disapproves a practice the Court has arguably sanctioned in prior cases; or 14 overturns a longstanding practice that lower courts had uniformly approved."
15 Colwell, 118 Nev. at 472; Hubbard v. State, 112 Nev. 946, 948 n.1, 920 P.2d 991, 993 16 n.1 (1996).

17 Once it is determined that a rule is new, the next step is to determine whether 18 the conviction of the person[s] seeking application of the new rule has become final.
19 Id. A conviction is final when judgment has been entered, the availability of appeal 20 has been exhausted, and a petition for certiorari to the Supreme Court has been denied 21 or the time for the petition has expired. Id. (quoting Griffith v. Kentucky, 479 U.S.
22 314, 321 n. 6, 107 S. Ct. 708 (1987)). If a conviction is not final, then the Court must 23 apply new rules of federal constitutional law or be in violation of the basic norms of 24 constitutional adjudication. Id. If a conviction, however, is final, then the general rule 25 is not to apply the rule retroactively. Id.

26 The final step, once it is determined that a subsequent interpretation has 27 announced a new rule and that the conviction of the person[s] seeking adjudication 28 has become final, it is to determine if one of the two exceptions to the retroactivity bar

1 apply to the specific case at hand. The two exceptions enunciated in Colwell are more 2 liberally defined than in Teague. See, Clem v. State, 119 Nev. 615, 81 P.3d 521 3 (2004). A new constitutional rule will apply retroactively under Colwell if: “(1) the 4 rule establishes that it is unconstitutional to proscribe certain conduct as criminal or to 5 impose a type of punishment on certain defendants because of their status or offense; 6 or (2) it establishes a procedure without which the likelihood of an accurate 7 conviction is seriously diminished.” Id. at 531 (quoting Colwell, at 820, 59 P.3d at 8 472).

9 Essentially, “...on collateral review under Colwell, if a rule is not new, it 10 applies retroactively; if it is new, but not a constitutional rule, it does not apply 11 retroactively; and if it is new and constitutional, then it applies retroactively only if it 12 falls within one of Colwell’s delineated exceptions.” Id.

13 B. Retroactivity Analysis as Applied to McConnell

14 McConnell stands for the proposition that the enumerated felonies in Nevada’s 15 Felony Murder statute as per NRS 200.030(1)(b) cannot be used both to establish 16 first-degree murder and to aggravate the murder to capital status. McConnell, supra, 17 at 623. This rule is in contradiction to the prior cases that specifically upheld the use 18 of felonies to establish felony-murder and to aggravate the murder to capital status.¹
19 In Atkins v. State, 112 Nev. 1122, 923 P.2d 1119 (1996), the most recent case in this 20 line of decisions, the Nevada Supreme Court specifically rejected the argument that 21 the felony aggravator statute did not sufficiently narrow the class of eligible persons 22

23 ¹ Petrocelli v. State, 101 Nev. 46, 692 P. 2d 503 (1985) (NRS 200.033 was constitutional and that the statutory 24 aggravators it lists, even “in combination,” properly narrow the class of persons eligible for the death penalty); Gallego 25 v. State, 117 Nev. 348, 370, 23 P.3d 227, 242 (2001); see also, Bennet v. State, 106 Nev. 135, 787 P.2d 797 (1990), 26 overruled on other grounds by Leslie v. Warden, 118 Nev. 773, 59 P.3d 440 (2002)) (NRS 200.033 subdivision 4 is not 27 constitutionally overbroad or arbitrary); Smith v. State, 114 Nev. 33, 953 P.2d 264 (1998) (subdivision 8 is not 28 constitutionally vague and ambiguous); Cambro v. State, 114 Nev. 106, 952 P.2d 946 (1998) and Geary v. State, 112
Nev. 1434 (1996) (subdivision 9 is not constitutionally vague); Leslie v. Warden, 118 Nev. 773, 59 P.3d 440 (2002)
(Defense counsel was not deficient in failing to argue that “at random and without apparent motive” aggravator was not supported by evidence in penalty phase of defendant’s murder trial, where Supreme Court had consistently upheld that aggravator when, as in defendant’s case, killing was unnecessary to complete robbery, and defense counsel, knowing that Supreme Court was required to independently review all aggravating circumstances, may have chosen to focus on issues more likely to yield results); Miranda v. State, 101 Nev. 562, 707 P.2d 1121 (1985).

1 for the death penalty. Thus, because McConnell expressly overruled precedent, the 2 rule is “new” as defined in Colwell, supra.²

3 Defendant argues that because the Court in McConnell based its ruling on 4 Lowenfeld v. Phelps, 484 U.S. 231, 108 S.Ct. 546 (1988), which involved narrowing 5 the class of murders eligible for the death penalty, then the rule cannot be new 6 because Lowenfeld was decided in 1988 (prior to Defendant’s case becoming final), 7 “and it is simply not a new rule that aggravating circumstances must genuinely narrow 8 the class of persons eligible for the death penalty.” Appellant’s Supplemental Brief 9 (“Brief”), 12/14/05, 11, 11 n.4. Defendant also notes that the U.S. Supreme Court did 10 not consider the Lowenfeld decision to be new rule under its “stringent” retroactivity 11 analysis. Brief, 11 n.4. Defendant misstates, however, the Court’s reliance on 12 Lowenfeld.

13 Lowenfeld held that the same felony can be used to establish first-degree 14 murder and to aggravate it to capital status so long as the definition of capital murder 15 was sufficiently narrow even before aggravators were considered. McConnell v. State, 16 107 P.3d 1287, 1291 (Nev. 2005). The Court, based on the analytical framework of 17 Lowenfeld, as opposed to the decision, asked, “Is Nevada’s definition of capital 18 felony murder narrow enough that no further narrowing of death eligibility is needed 19 once the defendant is convicted?” Id. (Emphasis added and internal quotations 20 omitted). This Court in McConnell reached a contrary ruling as to Nevada’s death 21 eligibility narrowness based on the same analysis that was used in Lowenfeld, but it in 22 no way based its ruling on the decision in Lowenfeld. Thus, McConnell is a new rule.

25 ² The Court in Colwell, supra, at 820 stated:

26 We consider too sweeping the proposition [as espoused in Teague] that a rule is new whenever any 27 other reasonable interpretation of prior law was possible. However, a rule is new, for example, when 28 the decision it overrules precedent, or disapprove[s] a practice this Court had arguably sanctioned in prior cases, or overturn[s] a longstanding practice that lower courts had uniformly approved.”

(Internal quotations marks and citations omitted).

1 Additionally, Defendant's contention here is analogous to the defendant's 2 arguments in Colwell. There, defendant argued that Ring v. Arizona, 536 U.S. 584, 3 122 S.Ct. 2428 (2002), should be applied retroactively because the U.S. Supreme 4 Court used prior case law in deciding Ring, and hence, Ring could not be considered 5 new for purposes of retroactivity analysis. Colwell, supra, at 821. This Court, 6 however, stated that while Ring had applied prior case law, it also had to address prior 7 opinion which contradicted the principles set out in Ring. Id. The Court decided, 8 "[b]ecause Ring dealt with conflicting prior authority and expressly overruled 9 precedent in announcing its rule [...] the rule is new." Id.

10 The same situation is evident here with McConnell. While the Court used 11 Lowenfeld in framing its reasoning, it expressly overruled prior Nevada case law, and 12 this overruling makes McConnell a new rule.³ Moreover, the Court stated in its 13 opinion denying a rehearing on McConnell that the "analysis and result reached in 14 [McConnell] [was] dependent on the pertinent Nevada statutes." McConnell v. State, 15 107 P.3d 1287, 1293 (Nev. 2005). (Emphasis added).

16 Next, the inquiry is whether Defendant's conviction was final when McConnell 17 was decided, and the answer is yes. The Court affirmed Defendant's conviction on 18 direct appeal October 1, 1997; Defendant's petition for rehearing was denied on 19 February 9, 1998; and Defendant's petition for writ of certiorari filed with the United 20 States Supreme Court was denied on October 5, 1998. Accordingly, because 21 Defendant's conviction is final and the rule is new, it does not apply retroactively 22 unless it can fit within either exception to nonretroactivity. Neither exception is 23 applicable here.⁴

24 _____
25 ³ This Court is also not bound by decisions that consider federal law within the federal court system, so long as it gives 26 the minimum constitutional protections. See California v. Ramos, 463 U.S. 992, 1013-14, 103 S.Ct. 3446 (1983); see 27 also Sessions v. State, 106 Nev. 186, 191, 789 P.2d 1242, 1245 (1990) ("This court is not bound to follow a decision of the federal district court regarding Nevada law.").

28 ⁴ In argument C of his brief, beginning on page eleven, Defendant relies on the U.S. Supreme Court case of Bousley v.
United States, 523 U.S. 614, 118 S.Ct. 1604 (1998), inter alia, to argue that McConnell is a substantive rule of law, which is outside retroactivity analysis per Teague and Colwell, and that prior case law dictates that new substantive rules

1 C. The Retroactivity Exceptions Are Not Applicable to McConnell

2 Defendant is not part of a class of individuals who cannot be punished because 3 of their status or offense. See Brief, p. 14. An example of status would be the case of 4 Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1, 87 S.Ct. 1917 (1967) where the U.S. Supreme Court 5 ruled that a couple cannot be punished because they married persons of different 6 races. See Mackey v. United States, 401 U.S. 667, 692 n.7, 91 S. Ct. 1171 (1971)
7 (Harlan, J., concurring) (“[...][P]rimary, private individual conduct beyond the power 8 of the the criminal-lawmaking authority to proscribe.”). Another example of the 9 “status” to which the Court referred involved prohibition against executing mentally 10 retarded criminals. Colwell, 118 Nev. at 817. Defendant does not fit within the type of 11 status as contemplated by the U.S. Supreme Court or this Court.

12 Moreover, McConnell did not forbid the criminalization of a defendant who 13 kills another person in the course of a felony. In using Atkins v. Virginia, 536 U.S.
14 304, 122 S.Ct. 2242 (2002), Defendant claims that his “status as a [defendant] 15 convicted of first-degree murder using a felony-murder theory prevents the State from 16 using the robbery aggravating circumstance to render [defendant] eligible for death.”
17 Brief, p. 14. But the Atkins Court was using status in terms of culpability. See Atkins, 18 supra, at 312. A sentence of death is cruel, unusual, and excessive for one who 19 “neither took life, attempted to take a life, nor intended to take a life.” Id. Defendant 20 does not fit within this parameter. Defendant is not arguing that he could not 21 comprehend both the legal and moral culpability involved in his crime. Defendant 22 does not argue that he has “diminished capacity[y] to understand and process 23 information, to communicate, to abstract from mistakes and learn from experience, to 24

25 should always be applied retroactively. The Court, however, in Clem v. State, 119 Nev. 615, 81 P.3d 521, 532 (2003), 26 stated:

27 ...Bousley addresses only the retroactivity of United States Supreme Court decisions interpreting the 28 meaning of federal criminal statutes. It does not bind this court. Nor does it undermine our choice to apply the same retroactivity approach to both decisions announcing new procedural rules and decisions newly interpreting the substantive provisions of state criminal statutes.

1 engage in logical reasoning, to control impulses, and to understand the reactions of 2 others.” Id. at 318. Moreover, the type of status as discussed by the Atkins Court 3 focuses on the “who”, while the decision of McConnell is more concerned with the 4 “how”: How is the severity of punishment determined under capital murder for the 5 taking of a life?⁵

6 The purpose behind the Court’s new stance in McConnell is to sufficiently 7 narrow death eligibility of defendants who commit felony murder in full satisfaction 8 of the constitutional requirements as set forth in the Constitutions of the United States 9 and of the State of Nevada.⁶ McConnell stands for those “applications of the 10 Constitution that forbid the Government to utilize certain techniques or processes in 11 enforcing concededly valid societal proscriptions on the individual.” Mackey v.
12 United States, 401 U.S. 667, 91 S.Ct. 1171 (1971) (Harlan, J. concurring). Thus, 13 McConnell is not retroactive under the first exception in Colwell. The only other 14 possibility is the second exception, and as argued infra, the Defendant will likewise 15 find no relief within its parameters.

16 McConnell’s prohibition of the underlying felony for use as an aggravator for 17 death penalty purposes is not a procedure “in which accuracy of a conviction [or 18 sentence] is seriously diminished.” Colwell, supra, at 820. (Emphasis added). First, 19 where the conviction is sufficiently supported by evidence of premeditation and 20 deliberation as opposed to felony murder, use of the felony-aggravator is permissible.
21 See McConnell, supra. The Court can be assured that such narrowing has occurred 22 where a defendant pleads guilty or is tried solely under a theory of premeditation and 23 deliberation, or if a special verdict form is used when alternative theories are alleged.
24 Id. Where no such special verdict form was previously required under pre-McConnell

26
27 ⁵ Justice Harlan in his concurrence in Mackey v. United States gave examples of “who” as being a couple who chooses to use birth control and individuals who view pornography in the privacy of their home. See, Mackey, supra, at 693 n7.

28 ⁶ Specifically, Nev. Const. art. 1 §§ 6, 8 (5) (prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment and deprivation of life without due process of law, respectively).

1 law, this Court can nonetheless determine under a sufficiency of evidence analysis 2 that the conviction is supported by sufficient evidence of premeditation and 3 deliberation as this Court did on direct appeal. Such evidence of Rippo's murder of 4 Lauri Jacobson and Denise Lizzi is detailed in the State's Answering brief on file 5 herein (See Answering Brief, pp. 7-8) and was part of the record on appeal. In fact, 6 Rippo's admission to Thomas Simms and Donald Hill that he planned and intended in 7 advance to kill these two girls is no different than Robert McConnell's plea of guilty 8 under a theory of premeditation in terms of the requisite narrowing being met.

9 Second, in addition to evidence of premeditation and deliberation, this Court 10 can look to any valid aggravating circumstances found by the jury which are not 11 called into question by McConnell to determine whether the accuracy of the death 12 verdict is seriously diminished. The three aggravating circumstances that would 13 remain against Rippo involve torture for the use of the stun gun and manual 14 strangulation of the victims as well as being on parole and having committed a prior 15 crime of violence, namely sexual assault in 1982. Details of these aggravators are 16 further discussed in the State's Answering brief already on file herein. See Answering 17 brief, pp. 9-10.

18 The situation of concern to the Nevada Supreme Court is one in which the 19 "sole" aggravating circumstance is the same as the underlying felony upon which the 20 conviction is based because there is no constitutionally mandated narrowing.
21 Lowenfield v. Phelps, 484 U.S. 231, (1988), which served as the framework for the 22 Court's decision in McConnell, dealt with a challenge to a death sentence on the basis 23 that the "sole aggravating circumstance was identical to an element of the capital 24 murder." Furthermore, in McConnell the Court stated, "But in cases where the State 25 bases a first-degree murder conviction in whole or part on felony murder, to seek a 26 death sentence the State will have to prove an aggravator other than one based on the 27 felony murder's predicate felony." McConnell, supra. [emphasis added]. Where a 28 death sentence is based upon multiple aggravators (other than the felony aggravator)

1 the narrowing function required by the constitution has been met and the retroactivity 2 of McConnell would serve no purpose.

3 As the Court has reasoned in the past, the reweighing of the evidence is 4 permissible under the Nevada Constitution and does not entail impermissible fact-5 finding. Leslie v. Warden, 118 Nev. 773, 782, 59 P.3d 440, 447 (2002) (citing Canape 6 v. State, 109 Nev. 864, 859 P.2d 1023 (1993)). This is especially true when the Court 7 has invalidated a heretofore valid aggravating circumstance. Id.; accord Browning v.
8 State, 120 Nev. 347, 91 P.3d 39, 51 (2004) ("Once an aggravator is stricken, the court 9 either reweighs the aggravating and mitigating circumstances or applies a harmless 10 error analysis."). In State v. Haberstroh, 119 Nev. 173, 69 P.3d 676 (2003) the Court 11 stated:

13 The Supreme Court has held that "the Federal Constitution does not 14 prevent a state appellate court from upholding a death sentence that is 15 based in part on an invalid or improperly defined aggravating 16 circumstance either by reweighing of the aggravating and mitigating 17 evidence or by harmless-error review. It appears that either analysis is 18 essentially the same and that either should achieve the same result.
19 Harmless-error review requires this court to actually perform a new 20 sentencing calculus to determine whether the error involving the invalid 21 aggravator was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. Reweighing 22 involves disregarding the invalid aggravating circumstances and 23 reweighing the remaining permissible aggravating and mitigating 24 circumstances. In any case, we must provide close appellate scrutiny of 25 the import and effect of invalid aggravating factors to implement the 26 well-established Eighth Amendment requirement of individualized 27 sentencing determinations in death penalty cases. Haberstroh, supra, at 28 682. (Internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

29 The State submits that the reweighing process is an inherent factor of 30 retroactivity analysis itself. In considering whether McConnell would apply 31 retroactively, the Court must consider that McConnell did not even receive the benefit 32 of the rule because he admitted to premeditation. McConnell, supra, at 615. And

1 while felony aggravators were considered, it is evident that McConnell was guilty
2 under premeditation and deliberation. See id. at 624. But the reweighing of evidence 3 in considering retroactivity is practically mandated when it is not clear under which 4 theory a defendant was adjudged guilty—felony-murder or premeditation and 5 deliberation. See NRS 177.055(2) (Requiring the court to review whether the jury 6 imposed a death sentence under the influence of “passion, prejudice, or and arbitrary 7 factor”). The Court has stated:

9 We recognize that many of our duties require us to make factual 10 determination. For example, this court is often called upon to determine 11 whether the jury’s verdict is supported by sufficient evidence. With 12 respect to capital cases, we are required to consider whether the sentence 13 was imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice, or any arbitrary 14 factor and whether the sentence is excessive, considering the crime and 15 the defendant. We concluded that reweighing after invalidating an 16 aggravating circumstance is similar to these permissible duties.
Therefore, we hold that reweighing is proper under the Nevada
Constitution and statutes. We are of the same opinion today. Leslie, supra, at 782-83. (Emphasis added).

17 In the instant case, to determine the applicability of the second exception under 18 a retroactivity analysis, the Court must employ a process akin to reweighing, 19 particularly where a jury has not specified whether a Defendant was convicted using 20 felony-murder or premeditation and deliberation. An otherwise blanket retroactive 21 effect of McConnell would do a disservice to both the State and the juries’ 22 deliberation in past cases, considering that a less prejudicial option remains, even if it 23 is used on a case-by-case basis.

24 Further, the “exception” to the new rule espoused by the Court in McConnell is 25 a specific direction by the Court for the use of the special verdict form and urges the 26 argument that McConnell was intended to apply prospectively. It must be used when 27 the jury makes a specific determination during the guilt phase of the trial that its 28 verdict is based on a theory of premeditation and deliberation rather than felony

1 murder. McConnell, supra, at 624. Under this circumstance the Court in McConnell 2 deemed it permissible for the State to use the underlying felonies which could have 3 been the basis for the conviction for first-degree murder in the guilt phase as 4 aggravators warranting a sentence of death during the penalty phase. Id. In 5 McConnell, the Court specifically advised the State that “if it charges alternative 6 theories of first-degree murder intending to seek a death sentence, jurors in the guilt 7 phase should receive a special verdict form that allows them to indicate whether they 8 find first-degree murder based on deliberation and premeditation, felony murder, or 9 both.” Id.

10 Essentially, McConnell “does not ‘alter[] our understanding of what constitutes 11 basic due process,’” but merely removes a specific type of aggravator (one identical to 12 the underlying charge) from consideration in imposing the death penalty. See, 13 Bockting v. Bayer, 399 F.3d 1010, 1020 (9th Cir. 2005) (quoting Brown v. Uphoff, 14 381 F.3d 1219, 1226-27 (10th Cir. 2004)). McConnell does not disturb the conviction 15 of a defendant, but only addresses the severity of the punishment imposed. If it is to 16 be death, then McConnell narrows those eligible, but it in no way affects a 17 defendant’s culpability. The importance of this distinction cannot be overstated.

18 Moreover, as a policy concern, the State has no way of reviewing prior cases 19 similar to Defendant’s and deciding how a jury reached its decisions. No form existed 20 in which the jury specified its verdict based on deliberation and premeditation, felony 21 murder, or both.⁷ The State cannot poll former juries to discover their thought 22 processes in making their decisions. Again, the only way for the Court to determine 23

25 ⁷ The State notes that this problem was also acknowledged by Defendant:

26 The jury was not given a special verdict form, however, and it is therefore impossible to know whether 27 all of the jurors found [Defendant] guilty under a theory of premeditation and deliberation. Both 28 [felony murder and premeditation and deliberation] were presented and argued to the jury, the jury was instructed on both theories, and it is certainly possible the jury could have based its decision upon [premeditation and deliberation]

Brief, p. 16.

1 this is to review the sufficiency of the evidence in order to ascertain whether a 2 defendant's sentence was supported by a theory of premeditation.

3 To make McConnell apply retroactively would be a severe blow to the public's 4 confidence in the rule of law and in the finality of so many serious cases that go back 5 twenty to thirty years. On this point, the Court in Colwell reasoned:

7 [...]Even the effect on finality is not extreme when a state appellate 8 court, as opposed to a federal court, decides to apply a rule retroactively: 9 first, the decision affects only cases within that state, and second, most 10 collateral review occurs much sooner than federal collateral review. In 11 addition, we are concerned with encouraging the district courts of this 12 State to strive for perspicacious, reasonable application of constitutional 13 principles in cases where no precedent appears to be squarely on point.
14 Colwell, supra, at 818. (Emphasis added).

15 However, in light of the many inmates on death row and the fact that the State 16 and lower courts were inarguably acting within "precedent squarely on point," the 17 effect on finality is that no finality seems to exist at all. It is unduly prejudicial to ask 18 the State to restructure its capital sentencing hearings and simultaneously address the 19 appeals that a retroactive McConnell would bring forth.

20 This Court has assured the State for no less than twenty years that it was 21 operating well within Constitutional bounds in the manner in which it alleged felony-22 aggravators and multiple theories of liability without need for a special verdict. See, 23 note 1, supra. This is even truer when the Court reaffirmed the use of the underlying 24 felony as a felony aggravator in Atkins v. State, supra, decided almost a decade after 25 Lowenfeld. The State contends that it is bad public policy to afford retroactive relief 26 under these circumstances: "...It does not follow that, when a criminal defendant has 27 had a full trial and one round of appeals in which the state faithfully applied the 28 Constitution as we understood it at the time, he may nevertheless continue to litigate his claims indefinitely in hopes that we will one day have a change of heart." Shriro v.
Summerlin, 542 U.S. 348, 354, 124 S.Ct. 2519, 2526 (2004).

1 As a last policy consideration, should the Court apply McConnell retroactively 2 its application would be analogous to applying an ex post facto law against the State.
3 The decision in McConnell was completely unexpected and unforeseeable. See, 4 Stevens v. Warden, 114 Nev. 1217, 969 P.2d 945 (1998) (quoting Bouie v. City of 5 Columbia, 378 U.S. 347, 84 S.Ct. 1697 (1964)) overruled on other grounds by 6 Nevada Dep't of Prisons v. Bowen, 103 Nev. 477, 745 P.2d 697 (1987); Houlgin v.
7 Raines, 695 F.2d 372, 374 (9th Cir. 1982). At the time Defendant's punishment was 8 imposed in 1998, the State was operating under good law and made decisions about 9 the theory of murder on which to proceed and which aggravating circumstances to 10 pursue, for which the State is now being prejudiced and punished. See Stevens, supra, 11 at 1222. When the Court changes its mind as it so often has done in the area of 12 capital litigation, the result is a hodge podge of conflicting rulings with which the 13 State can not keep up.

14 In considering retroactivity and the potential harm to the public's sense of 15 fairness and finality, this Court would be wise to consider the U.S. Supreme Court's 16 description of the theory underlying the function of habeas corpus as described in 17 Teague, supra:

19 The interest in leaving concluded litigation in a state of repose, that is, 20 reducing the controversy to a final judgment not subject to further 21 judicial revision, may quite legitimately be found by those responsible 22 for defining the scope of the writ to outweigh in some, many or most 23 instances the competing interest in readjudicating convictions according 24 to all legal standards in effect when a habeas petition is filed.... Given 25 the broad scope of constitutional issues cognizable on habeas ... it is 26 sounder in adjudicating habeas petitions generally to apply the law prevailing at the time a conviction became final than it is to seek to dispose of [habeas] cases on the basis of intervening changes in constitutional interpretation.

27 Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 306, 109 S.Ct. 1060, 1073 (1989) (citing Mackey v.
28 United States, 401 U.S. 667, 91 S.Ct. 1160 (1971)) (Emphasis added); accord

1 Colwell, supra, at 820 (“...[T]his adaption approach taken in Teague and its progeny 2 provides us with a fair and straightforward framework for determining retroactivity.”).
3 In Defendant’s case, the law at the time of his penalty hearing should prevail and his 4 sentence of death should stand.

5 CONCLUSION

6 Based on the foregoing, the State again respectfully requests that the Order 7 Denying Defendant’s Petition for Writ of Habeas Corpus be AFFIRMED.
