I. SUMMARY OF THE ISSUE & CONCLUSION	1
A. ISSUE: Whether Nevada should be the only Uniform Common Interest Ownership Act (“UCIOA”) jurisdiction to deny homeowner associations standing to bring claims for construction defects located in individual units and thereby defy the plain language of the UCIOA, the express intent of its drafters, Nevada and nationwide case law, and the Restatement (Third) of Property?	1
B. CONCLUSION: No. This Court should overturn the lower court’s decision and allow the Association standing to bring claims for construction defects located within the individual units.	1
II. INTRODUCTION	1
III. STATEMENT OF RELIEF SOUGHT	3
IV. REASONS WHY THE WRIT SHOULD ISSUE	3
A. The Importance of the Issues, the Need for Immediate Relief, and Association’s Lack of Any Other Adequate Remedy Warrant this Court’s Exercise of its Original Jurisdiction	3
1. Prohibition/Mandamus review is appropriate to consider the District Court’s Order	3
2. Nevada District Courts have held that NRS 116.3012(1)(d) grants standing to an HOA to pursue claims arising from individual residences	4
B. The District Court Abused its Discretion in Denying the Association’s Standing	4
V. ARGUMENT	5
A. The UCIOA Expressly Authorizes an HOA to Bring or Defend All Claims Affecting the Common-Interest Community, Including Those Impacting Individual Units	5
B. Fundamental Rules of Statutory Construction Demonstrate the Association’s Standing Over Those Claims Excluded by the District Court	6
C. Nevada District Courts Have Applied the Plain Language of NRS 116.3102(1)(d) and Held that an HOA May Assert Claims Arising from Individual Residences	10

1	1.	Colorado's UCIOA is materially identical to Nevada's UCIOA and its decisions are instructive	10
2	2.	All other states to consider HOA standing have concluded that an HOA has authority to bring claims affecting individual residences	13
4	D.	The CC&Rs Drafted by D.R. Horton Likewise Establish that the HOA Has Authority to Bring Claims for Construction Defects Beyond the "Common Elements"	14
5	1.	The CC&Rs define the common-interest community as the entirety of Court at Aliante	14
6	2.	The CC&Rs grant the Association the right to repair individual units	15
7	3.	A developer does not have the power to dictate the scope of NRS 116.3102(1)(d)	17
8	E.	D.R. Horton May Not Challenge the Association's Standing	18
9	F.	The District Court Should Have Rejected D.R. Horton's Other Arguments	19
10	1.	D.R. Horton's purported concern for individual owners was misplaced	19

1 Petitioner, High Noon at Arlington Ranch Homeowners Association ("Association"), 2 pursuant to Nev. Const., Art. 6, § 4, NRS 34.320 or NRS 34.160, and NRAP 21, requests this 3 Court to issue a writ of prohibition or mandamus. The Association respectfully submits its 4 Petition requesting this Court order Respondents, the Eighth Judicial District of the State of 5 Nevada and the Honorable Susan H. Johnson, to rule that the Association has standing to bring 6 claims for construction defects located in individual condominium units. The present 7 controversy raises urgent matters of public interest. Principles of sound judicial economy and 8 administration favor the granting of the instant petition.

9 I. SUMMARY OF THE ISSUE & CONCLUSION

- 10 A. ISSUE: Whether Nevada should be the only Uniform Common Interest
11 Ownership Act ("UCIOA") jurisdiction to deny homeowner associations 12 standing to bring claims for construction defects located in individual units 13 and thereby defy the plain language of the UCIOA, the express intent of its 14 drafters, Nevada and nationwide case law, and the Restatement (Third) of 15 Property?
- 16 B. CONCLUSION: No. This Court should overturn the lower court's 17 decision and allow the Association standing to bring claims for construction 18 defects located within the individual units.

19 II. INTRODUCTION

20 The Arlington Ranch Community consists of 342 attached residential units and common 21 areas located in Clark County, Nevada. The operative declaration for the community created a 22 common interest community governed by the Uniform Common-Interest Ownership Act 23 ("UCIOA").

24 High Noon at Arlington Ranch Homeowners Association ("Association") on behalf of 25 itself and its members, served its NRS 40.645 Notice of Construction Defects on Real Party in 26 Interest, D.R. Horton, Inc. ("D.R. Horton") on January 19, 2008. The Association sent the 27 Notice as the result of severe and pervasive community-wide construction defects. (See, 28 Petitioner's Appendix ["PA"], Vol. I, Exh. 5, pp. 157-161; Vol. I-III, Exh. 5, pp. 246-738).
The Association also filed a Complaint against D.R. Horton on June 7, 2007, bringing causes of actions primarily based on construction defects. (See, PA, Vol. I, Exh. 4, pp. 13-24). The Association brings the lawsuit on behalf of the Association and its members. (See, id.) Certain

1 construction defects for which Association seeks recovery are located inside the individual 2 “units” within the Arlington Ranch community.

3 The UCIOA expressly and unambiguously provides standing to the HOA to bring or 4 defend claims affecting the High Noon at Arlington Ranch “common-interest community,” both 5 for the shared amenities and the residential buildings that together make up the 6 “common-interest community.” Contrary to the express language of the UCIOA, the District 7 Court ruled that an HOA may not maintain claims to remedy the construction defects of 8 individual units. Such drastic limitation on the authority of HOAs contravenes the plain 9 language of the UCIOA and eviscerates its broad purpose to empower HOAs to protect the 10 entire community – including the most important part of that community – the buildings where 11 owners live.

12 The lower court’s ruling also contradicts the express intent of the drafters of the 13 Uniform Act, stating: “This Act makes clear that the association can sue or defend suits even 14 though the suit may involve only units as to which the association itself has no ownership 15 interest.” Consistent with the plain language of the statute and the intent of its drafters, several 16 Nevada District Courts have ruled that HOAs have standing under NRS 116.3102(1)(d) to 17 pursue construction defect claims affecting the individual units of a common-interest 18 community. In addition, every court in the nation with a similar statute considering the 19 question of HOA standing found that HOAs have the power to bring claims affecting the entire 20 common-interest community, including individual units. Consistent with the broad scope of 21 NRS 116.3102(1)(d), the Declaration of Covenants, Conditions & Restrictions and Reservation 22 of Easements for High Noon at Arlington Ranch (“CC&Rs”) (PA, Vol. IV, Exh. 6, pp. 755- 23 848), drafted by D.R. Horton, contain no limitation on the HOA’s authority to bring 24 construction defect claims affecting the individual units.

25 In contravention of the foregoing, D.R. Horton filed a motion for partial summary 26 judgment claiming that the Association does not have standing to bring claims for construction 27 defects located within the community’s “units.” (See, PA, Vol. I-III, Exh. 5, pp. 25-738). The 28 Association opposed the motion (PA, Vol. III-V, Exh. 6, pp. 739-1081) and D.R. Horton filed

1 its reply (PA, Vol. V, Exh. 7, pp. 1082-1098).

2 Despite the clear language of the UCIOA, the official commentary thereto, and the 3 holdings of every court considering the issue, the District Court manifestly abused its discretion 4 and found that the Association could not bring claims for constructional defects located within 5 the community's units (PA, Vol. V, Exh. 8, pp. 1099-1113).

6 III. STATEMENT OF RELIEF SOUGHT

7 The Association seeks a writ of prohibition or mandamus directing Respondent District 8 Court to vacate its order denying homeowner associations standing to bring claims for 9 construction defects located in individual condominium units.

10 IV. REASONS WHY THE WRIT SHOULD ISSUE

11 A. The Importance of the Issues, the Need for Immediate Relief, and 12 Association's Lack of Any Other Adequate Remedy Warrant this Court's Exercise of its Original Jurisdiction

13 1. Prohibition/Mandamus review is appropriate to consider the District
14 Court's Order

15 Writs of mandamus have been issued by this Court to control the arbitrary or capricious 16 abuses of discretion by the district courts. See, Marshall v. District Court, 836 P.2d 47, 52
17 (Nev. 1992). A writ of mandamus compels a government body or official to perform a legally 18 mandated act. NRS 34.160; Digesti v. Third Judicial Dist. Court, 853 P.2d 118 (Nev. 1993).
19 A writ of prohibition, on the other hand, compels a government body or government official to 20 cease performing an act beyond its legal authority. NRS 34.320; State ex. rel. Tidval v. Eighth 21 Judicial Dist. Court, 539 P.2d 456 (Nev. 1975). Such extraordinary relief has been issued to 22 resolve issues of standing in favor of a party seeking relief. See, e.g., State ex. rel. List v.
23 Douglas County, 524 P.2d 1271 (Nev. 1974).

24 In this matter, extraordinary relief is warranted. The Association and its members have 25 been denied their statutory right to have their collective interests represented in a single 26 constructional defect action. If the District Court's order stands, the Association and each of its 27 members will be forced to bring individual actions for the same reoccurring defects throughout 28 their community. The costs of the litigation will be enormous. The strain on judicial resources

1 will be extraordinary. Many homeowners may not be able to afford representation or the 2 associated costs. Inconsistent resolutions throughout the homeowners' claims are likely due to 3 the length and complexity of the competing efforts. Finally, many of the defects may never be 4 addressed due to units being abandoned as a result of economic hardship. In such cases, the 5 adjacent homeowners will suffer as defects causing water intrusion, mold, fire hazards and 6 community depreciation will go unaddressed even though they significantly impair their own 7 safety, value and home enjoyment.

8 The substantial prejudice may only be avoided by this Court issuing a writ compelling 9 the District Court to follow the plain language of NRS 116.3102(1)(d), the holdings of every 10 other jurisdiction addressing this standing issue, the Restatement (Third) of Property, and the 11 official commentary of the Uniform Common Interest Ownership Act. Relief from an appeal 12 will not rectify the substantial prejudice that the Association must first endure under the District 13 Court's order.

14 2. Nevada District Courts have held that NRS 116.3012(1)(d) grants 15 standing to an HOA to pursue claims arising from individual 16 residences

17 Several Nevada District Courts have ruled that HOAs have standing under NRS 18 116.3102(1)(d) to pursue construction defect claims affecting the individual units and common 19 elements of a common-interest community. (See, e.g., PA, Vol. I, Exh. 2, pp. 5-8; PA, Vol. I, 20 Exh. 3, pp. 9-12; PA, Vol. I, Exh. 1, pp. 1-4; and PA, Vol. V, Exh. 9, pp. 1114-1118). It is 21 respectfully submitted that this Court exercise its discretion and accept the petition to resolve 22 the contrasting decisions of the lower courts.

23 B. The District Court Abused its Discretion in Denying the Association's 24 Standing

25 As set forth below, the District Court has abused its discretion. It strayed from the plain 26 language of NRS 116.3102(1)(d). It dismissed the well-reasoned, thorough and consistent 27 analysis of other jurisdictions confronting the same standing issue. The District Court placed 28 its arbitrary interpretation of NRS 116 ahead of that reached by the Restatement (Third) of Property. Finally, this Court has compelled Nevada courts to look to the official commentary of 1 a model act when interpreting a statute's meaning. The District Court, however, arbitrarily and 2 capriciously ignored the official commentary of the Uniform Common Interest Ownership Act.

3 This Court should issue the extraordinary relief requested.

4 V. ARGUMENT

5 A. The UCIOA Expressly Authorizes an HOA to Bring or Defend All Claims 6 Affecting the Common-Interest Community, Including Those Impacting Individual Units

7 The Nevada Supreme Court "has consistently held that when there is no ambiguity in a 8 statute, there is no opportunity for judicial construction, and the law must be followed unless it 9 yields an absurd result." Diamond v. Swick, 28 P.3d 1087, 1089 (Nev. 2001). "When 'the 10 words of the statute have a definite and ordinary meaning, this court will not look beyond the 11 plain language of the statute, unless it is clear that this meaning was not intended.'" Harris 12 Assocs. v. Clark Cty. Sch. Dist., 81 P.3d 532, 534 (Nev. 2003).

13 The Nevada Legislature has expressly and unambiguously granted homeowner 14 associations standing to bring or defend claims on behalf of its homeowners for any and all 15 matters impacting the common-interest community. Specifically, NRS 116.3102(1)(d) states:

16 . . . an association may . . . [i]nstitute, defend or intervene in 17 litigation or administrative proceedings in its own name on behalf 18 of itself or two or more units' owners on matters affecting the common-interest community.

19 The UCIOA explicitly includes individual "units" as part of the "common-interest community," 20 stating: "'Unit' means a physical portion of the common-interest community designated for 21 separate ownership or occupancy" NRS 116.093 (emphasis added).

22 Were there any doubt that a "common-interest community" means precisely what the 23 statute states, i.e., the entire residential "community" including the "units," the UCIOA defines 24 "common-interest community" as:

25 real estate with respect to which a person, by virtue of his 26 ownership of a unit, is obligated to pay for real estate other than that unit.

27 NRS 116.021. Thus, to constitute a "common-interest community," the owners of the 28 individual residences must simply have an obligation to pay dues to the association for "real

1 estate other than” his or her individual residence. Such other “real estate” may include a pool, 2 common grounds, streets, clubhouse, parking lots, sidewalks and all other real estate owned by 3 the association.

4 Nevada’s statutory provisions thus explicitly and unambiguously empower associations 5 to bring or defend claims affecting the buildings and individual units occupied by owners.
6 Even if the statutory language were not so clear and explicit, the drafters of the Uniform Act 7 have clearly stated their intent that associations have such authority.

8 This Act makes clear that the association can sue or defend suits even though the suit 9 may involve only units as to which the association itself has no ownership interest. Comment 3
10 to UCIOA § 3-102(a)(4), 7 ULA 96 (1982). A court must accept the intent of the drafters of a 11 uniform act as the Legislature’s intent when it adopts a uniform act. See, Beazer Homes 12 Nevada, Inc. v. Eighth Judicial District Court, 97 P.3d 1132, 1137 (Nev. 2004); Harris Assocs.
13 v. Clark Cty. Sch. Dist., 81 P.3d 532, 534 (Nev. 2003) (“if a statute ‘is ambiguous . . . the 14 drafter’s intent ‘becomes the controlling factor in statutory construction’”); see also, Hill v.
15 DeWitt, 54 P.3d 849, 860 (Colo. 2002) (a court should “accept the intent of the drafters of a 16 uniform law as that of the general assembly”).

17 The analysis thus should go no further. Not only is the UCIOA’s language explicit, but 18 the express intent of the Uniform Act’s drafters puts to rest any question regarding the intended 19 scope of an association’s authority to bring construction defect claims. This Court should 20 overturn the lower court’s ruling and grant full standing to the Association in accordance with 21 the UCIOA.

22 B. Fundamental Rules of Statutory Construction Demonstrate the 23 Association’s Standing Over Those Claims Excluded by the District Court

24 “[N]o part of a statute [may] be rendered meaningless and its language ‘should not be 25 read to produce absurd or unreasonable results.’” D.R. Horton, Inc. v. Eighth Judicial Dist. Ct., 26 168 P.3d 731, 738 (Nev. 2007). “[W]e ‘construe statutes to give meaning to all of their parts 27 and language, and this court will read each sentence, phrase, and word to render it meaningful 28 within the context of the purpose of the legislation.’” Harris Assocs., 81 P.3d at 534.

1 A court may not imply a limitation that does not exist in the plain language of a statute.
2 See, Glenbrook Homeowners Assoc. Inc. v. Pettitt, 919 P.2d 1061, 1063 (Nev. 1996). In 3 Glenbrook, the trial court granted summary judgment against an HOA finding that a statute did 4 not authorize it to exercise eminent domain. The Nevada Supreme Court reversed and stated: 5 “If the legislature had intended to limit the power of eminent domain with respect to the 6 construction of byroads, it would have expressly done so.” Id. at 1063.

7 Disregarding the plain language of the UCIOA and the explicit intent of its drafters, 8 D.R. Horton argued that the term “common-interest community” as used in NRS 9 116.3102(1)(d) severely restricts the authority of associations to bring or defend claims to solely 10 the “common elements” of a common-interest community. There is nothing in the plain 11 language of NRS 116.3102(1)(d) to support the conclusion that the term “common-interest 12 community” means solely “common elements” to the exclusion of residential “Units.” On the 13 contrary, the Legislature expressly included individual “units” as a “portion of the 14 common-interest community” NRS 116.095.

15 In asserting that an association may only bring or defend claims affecting the limited, 16 “common elements” of a common-interest community, D.R. Horton thus argued that 17 “common-interest community” means exactly the same thing as “common elements.” 18 “Common elements,” however, is a defined term in the UCIOA meaning “all portions of the 19 common-interest community other than the units” NRS 116.017. Thus, “common 20 elements,” like “units,” is specifically defined as a portion of the greater “common-interest 21 community” thus negating D.R. Horton’s effort to read it to comprise the entire 22 common-interest community.

23 D.R. Horton also cited to the definition of unit boundaries, but regardless of the 24 boundary line, the components remain conclusively within the common interest community.

25 Were it the Legislature’s intention to limit an association’s right to institute litigation on 26 matters affecting only the common elements of a common-interest community, it would have 27 used the term “common elements” instead of “common-interest community” in NRS 28 116.3102(1)(d). It did not and the Court may not rewrite the statutory language to create such a

1 drastic limitation. See, Glenbrook Homeowners Assoc., 919 P.2d at 1063.

2 In addition, D.R. Horton's view that the term "common-interest community" as used in 3 NRS 116.3102(1)(d) actually means "common elements," disregards that "common-interest 4 community" is used repeatedly in the UCIOA to mean the community at large, including the 5 individual units. See, Diamond, 28 P.3d at 1090 ("Other words or phrases used in the statute or 6 separate subsections of the statute can be reviewed to determine the meaning and purpose of the 7 statute."). For example:

- 8 - "Developmental rights" means the right to "[c]reate units, common elements or 9 limited common elements within a common-interest community." NRS 116.039.
- 10 - For "Leasehold common-interest communities," the "number of units in a 11 common-interest community" must be disclosed. NRS 116.2106.
- 12 - The declaration must state formulas if "units may be added to or withdrawn from 13 the common-interest community" NRS 116.2107.
- 14 - A "Public offering statement" must include "The estimated number of units in 15 the common-interest community" NRS 116.4103(c).
- 16 - A "Public offering statement" has different disclosure requirements "[i]f a 17 common-interest community [is] composed of not more than 12 units" NRS 116.41035.
- 18 - The "Contents of declaration" must include the "name of every county in which 19 any part of the common-interest community is situated" NRS 116.2105(b).
- 20 - The declaration "must be recorded in every county in which any portion of the 21 common-interest community is located" NRS 116.2101.
- 22 - The "information statement" to purchasers must include the language: "When 23 you enter into a purchaser agreement to buy a home or unit in a common-interest 24 community" NRS 116.41095.

25 The defined term "common-interest community" cannot mean fundamentally different 26 things depending on where it shows up in the UCIOA. Rather, it has one, and only one, 27 meaning – the "common-interest community" includes all the real estate within it, including the 28 individual units.

29 Recognizing that its interpretation is contrary to the plain language of NRS 30 116.3102(1)(d), D.R. Horton patently misconstrued the unambiguous definition of "common-31 interest community." As noted above, "common-interest community" means "real estate with 32 respect to which a person, by virtue of his ownership of a unit, is obligated to pay for real estate

1 other than that unit.” NRS 116.021.

2 D.R. Horton asserted that the Legislature’s use of the language “obligated to pay for real 3 estate other than the unit” somehow limits the term “common-interest community” to the few 4 common elements owned by the Association. D.R. Horton’s argument is nonsensical where the 5 words “obligated to pay for real estate other than the unit” are plainly and simply meant to 6 describe a community where individual owners pay for the maintenance and use of commonly 7 owned real estate, i.e., a community pool, in addition to their individual unit. D.R. Horton also 8 ignored that the UCIOA explicitly includes individual “units” as part of the “common-interest 9 community,” stating: “‘Unit’ means a physical portion of the common-interest community 10 designated for separate ownership or occupancy” NRS 116.093.

11 Notably absent from D.R. Horton’s unfounded interpretation was any explanation how 12 its view squares with the drafters’ explicit statement that an “association can sue or defend suits 13 even though the suit may involve only units as to which the association itself has no ownership 14 interest.” Comment 3 to UCIOA § 3-102(a)(4), 7 ULA 96 (1982). Even if NRS 116.3102(1)(d) 15 could be viewed as ambiguous, which it plainly is not, the rule that a legislative body adopts the 16 interpretation given the uniform law by its drafters negates D.R. Horton’s interpretation. See, 17 Harris Assocs., 81 P.3d at 534 (“if a statute ‘is ambiguous . . . the drafter’s intent ‘becomes the 18 controlling factor in statutory construction’”).

19 D.R. Horton’s interpretation contradicts the express provisions of the UCIOA and 20 eviscerates an association’s ability to protect the most important part of a “common-interest 21 community” – the buildings where owners reside. As the Legislature made absolutely clear, as 22 long as a matter affects the “common-interest community,” an association has the power to 23 “[i]nstitute, defend or intervene in litigation or administrative proceedings” – including those 24 matters impacting individual units. NRS 116.3102(1)(d). The District Court’s Order should not 25 stand.

1 C. Every Jurisdiction Adopting the UCIOA Holds that HOAs Have Standing
2 to Bring Claims Affecting to Individual Residences

3 Nevada's Chapter 116 is an implementation of the Uniform Common Interest 4 Ownership Act. Nevada courts are under a legislative mandate to apply and construe the 5 provisions of NRS Chapter 116 "so as to effectuate its general purpose to make uniform the law 6 with respect to the subject of this chapter among states enacting it." NRS 116.1109(2). The 7 same UCIOA has been adopted in multiple other jurisdictions and all other jurisdictions
8 recognize that the express language of the UCIOA authorizes HOAs to bring construction defect 9 claims for entire common-interest community – including individual residences.¹

10 1. Colorado's UCIOA is materially identical to Nevada's UCIOA and 11 its decisions are instructive

12 Colorado's UCIOA includes language identical to Nevada's 116.3102(1)(d) and states 13 that an association may: "[i]nstitute, defend, or intervene in litigation or administrative 14 proceedings in its own name on behalf of itself or two or more unit owners on matters affecting 15 the common interest community." CRS § 38-33.3-101. Likewise, Colorado and Nevada's 16 definition of "common-interest community" are materially indistinguishable. Colorado defines 17 "common interest community" as: "real estate described in a declaration with respect to which 18 a person, by virtue or such person's ownership of a unit, is obligated to pay for real estate taxes, 19 insurance premiums, maintenance, or improvement of other real estate described in a 20 declaration." Id. at § 38-33.3-103. Both definitions simply require that to be a "common 21 interest community" the owner of a unit must also pay for common property other than his unit.

22 Yacht Club II Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. A.C. is highly instructive here because it 23 involves virtually identical language found in Colorado's version of the Uniform Common 24 Interest Ownership Act. Yacht Club II Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. A.C., 94.P.3d 1177 (Colo.

26 ¹ Besides Nevada, five other jurisdictions have adopted the Uniform Common Interest 27 Ownership Act. These jurisdictions are: Alaska (Alaska Stat. §§ 34.08.010 to 34.08.995); Colorado 28 (CRS §§ 38-33.3-101 to 38-33.3-319); Connecticut (Conn. Gen. Stat. §§ 47-200 et seq.); Minnesota (Minn. Stat. Ann. §§ 515B.1-101 to 515B.4-118); and West Virginia (W. Va. Code §§ 36B-1-101 to 36B-4-120).

1 App. 2003). In Yacht Club II, the defendant builder asserted that “the CCIOA does not confer 2 standing upon the HOA to raise damage claims related to individual units.” Id. at 1179. The 3 builder, like D.R. Horton here, argued that “[c]laims of that nature are not . . . ‘matters affecting 4 the common interest community.’” Id. The Court rejected the builder’s arguments and held 5 “the trial court erred in ruling that the HOA lacked standing to assert damage claims for 6 construction defects to numerous individual townhome units.” Id.

7 To reach its holding, the Yacht Club II court engaged in a comprehensive statutory 8 analysis. It began by finding that “[u]nder the CCIOA, individual units are a part of the 9 ‘common interest community.’” Id. (defining “unit” as “a physical portion of the common 10 interest community which is designated for separate ownership or occupancy and the boundaries 11 of which are described in or determined from the declaration”). Nevada’s UCIOA has the 12 identical definition of “Unit.” NRS 116.095. Based on language identical to that found in 13 Nevada’s UCIOA, the Colorado Court ruled:

14 Recognizing the underlying purpose of [the Act], giving the 15 phrase “common interest community” the meaning ascribed to it 16 by [the Act] and realizing that an exception should not be read 17 into a statute that its plain language does not suggest, warrant, or 18 mandate, we conclude that [the Act] confers standing upon 19 associations to pursue damage claims on behalf of two or more 20 unit owners with respect to matters affecting their individual 21 units.

22 Yacht Club II, 94 P.3d at 1180.

23 In reaching its conclusion, the Colorado Court also relied on the Uniform Act’s drafters 24 “whose stated purpose was to make ‘clear that the association can sue or defend suits even 25 though the suit may involve only units as to which the association itself has no ownership 26 interest.’” Id., citing, UCIOA § 3-102, cmt. 3.

27 Another division of the Colorado Court of Appeals reached the same conclusion and 28 held that “the CCIOA’s plain language including individual units in the common interest community and Yacht Club II make clear that the Association has standing to assert claims of individual unit owners.” Heritage Village Owners Ass’n Inc. v. Golden Heritage Investors, Ltd., 89 P.3d 513, 515 (Colo. App. 2004). The Heritage court also rejected the builder’s

1 reliance on its CC&Rs that imposed maintenance duties on the individual owners for items
2 within their units, holding that such provisions “have no bearing on the Association’s standing 3 under the CCIOA.” Id.

4 The standing provision of Connecticut’s Common Interest Ownership Act also is 5 identical to Nevada’s NRS 116.3102(1)(d). It likewise states that an HOA has the right to 6 institute litigation “on behalf of itself or two or more unit owners on matters affecting the 7 common interest community.” Winthrop House Association, Inc. v. Brookside Elm, Ltd., 451 8 F. Supp. 2d 336, 340 (D. Conn. 2005) (quoting Conn. Gen. Stat. § 47-244(a)(4)). The federal 9 district court in Winthrop held that an HOA enjoyed broad standing to sue a developer for 10 construction defects in the common elements and the units. Id. at 341. The Winthrop court 11 noted that any other conclusion regarding the construction of the broad standing conferred by 12 the Connecticut statute would amount to “judicial legislation” by adding an exception to the 13 statute that was not intended by the Connecticut legislature when it adopted the Uniform 14 Common Interest Ownership Act. Id.

15 Consistent with all case law on the subject, the Restatement (Third) of Property likewise 16 recognizes that an HOA has standing to sue for defects to property for which it has no 17 ownership interest, including individually owned units. Section 6.11 states:

18 Except as limited by statute or the governing documents, the 19 association has the power to institute, defend, or intervene in 20 litigation or administrative proceedings in its own name, on behalf of itself, or on behalf of member property owners in a common-interest community on matters affecting the community.

21 Comment “a.” to Section 6.11 explains that “[t]he rule stated in this section . . . makes 22 clear that an association may sue or defend suits even though the suit involves only property in 23 which the association has no ownership interest.” Restatement § 6.11 includes the following 24 illustration:

25 Association sues developer over damage to common areas and 26 individually owned units resulting from construction defects. . . .
27 The association includes claims for damage to individual units as well as for damage to the common areas. The association has standing to do so.

28 Id. (emphasis added). Like NRS 116.3102(1)(d), Section 6.11 is modeled on UCIOA

§ 3-102(a)(4). See, Restatement (Third) of Property § 6.11, cmt. a.

This Court should not stray from the well-established common law established by other jurisdictions adopting the UCIOA. The District Court below should have followed suit.

2. All other states to consider HOA standing have concluded that an HOA has authority to bring claims affecting individual residences

The following states have adopted the Uniform Condominium Act whose standing provisions are materially indistinguishable from the UCIOA. All conclude that HOAs have the authority to bring claims on behalf of individual residences.

In Milton v. Council of Unit Owners of Bentley Place, 729 A.2d 981 (Md. App. 1999), the homeowners association sought damages from the developer for construction defects in the common areas and in the plumbing and HVAC systems in many of the individual residences. There, as here, the developer disputed the standing of the association to recover for defects in the individual units. The language before the court of appeals was virtually identical to NRS 116.3102(1)(d). It stated that the association has the power “[t]o sue and be sued, complain and defend, or intervene in litigation or administrative proceedings in its own name on behalf of itself or two or more unit owners on matters affecting the condominium.” Id. at 989. The court held that the association “could sue on behalf of the unit owners for claims based on the plumbing and HVAC defects that were common to many individual units at Bentley Place.” Id. at 990.

The Utah Supreme Court analyzed statutory provisions indistinguishable from Nevada’s. The Court likewise concluded that the HOA had statutory authority “to sue with respect to any cause of action relating to the common areas and facilities or more than one unit.” Brickyard Homeowners’ Assoc. Management Committee v. Gibbons Realty Co., 668 P.2d 535, 542 (Utah 1983). As here, the homeowners association in Brickyard sued for construction defects occurring in the common areas and the individually owned units. Id.

All other jurisdictions to consider the question of Association’s standing to bring claims for defects in individual units have answered the question in the affirmative. See, e.g., Ass’n of Unit Owners of Bridgeview Condos. v. Dunning, 69 P.3d 788, 798 (Or. App. 2003) (finding

1 association had standing to bring claims for construction defects in individual units); Sandy 2 Creek Condo. Assoc. v. Stolt and Egner, Inc., 642 N.E.2d 171, 176 (Ill. App. 1994) (finding that 3 association enjoys standing to sue on behalf of individual unit owners for fraudulent 4 misrepresentation by builder and developer that buildings were constructed in compliance with 5 building codes and in a good and workmanlike manner). This Court should remain consistent 6 with every other jurisdiction examining similar statutes to NRS Chapter 116.

7 D. The CC&Rs Drafted by D.R. Horton Likewise Establish that the HOA Has 8 Authority to Bring Claims for Construction Defects Beyond the “Common 9 Elements”

10 1. The CC&Rs define the common-interest community as the entirety of 11 High Noon at Arlington Ranch

12 The developers of “common-interest communities,” such as D.R. Horton, draft the 13 CC&Rs. They define the rights and responsibilities of the homeowners association and the 14 future owners of residences. Future homeowners have no say in the content of the CC&Rs.

15 The CC&Rs here charge the Association with the duty and responsibility of preserving 16 the community’s beauty, desirability and property values. (See, PA, Vol. IV, Exh. 6, pp. 755- 17 848 at ¶ L.) The CC&Rs recognize that the Association generally has the power “to do any and 18 all things . . . which are necessary or proper, in operating for the peace, health, comfort, safety 19 and general welfare of its Members, including any applicable powers set forth in NRS 20 § 116.3012, subject only to the limitations upon the exercise of such powers as are expressly set 21 forth in the Governing Documents, or in any applicable provision of NRS Chapter 116.” (Id. at 22 § 3.2).

23 Contrary to its litigation position that “common-interest community” actually means 24 only “common elements,” D.R. Horton’s CC&Rs leave no doubt that the “common-interest 25 community” means the entirety of High Noon at Arlington Ranch. In the CC&Rs, a “Unit” 26 means “that residential portion of this Community to be separately owned by each Owner”
27 (Id. at § 1.73) Thus, the term “common-interest community” in both NRS 116 and the CC&Rs 28 mean precisely the same thing – the entire High Noon at Arlington Ranch “Community” – the individual “Units,” the “Exclusive Use Areas,” and the “Common Elements.”

1 There is nothing in the CC&Rs limiting the High Noon at Arlington Ranch 2 “common-interest community” to only the “common elements,” or excluding the residential 3 units from the “community.” There likewise is no statement anywhere in the CC&Rs that 4 remotely divests the Association of authority to bring claims to remedy construction defects in 5 individual units. This Court should prevent the lower court from inserting such drastic 6 limitation from the CC&Rs – particularly where such limitation directly conflicts with the 7 Legislature’s express authorization for HOAs to have the power to bring or defend claims 8 affecting the entire community-interest community.

9 2. The CC&Rs grant the Association the right to repair individual units

10 D.R. Horton has argued that because owners have certain obligations to maintain their 11 units, the Association is somehow divested of its right to bring claims to remedy construction 12 defects in (or outside) of the Units. Such argument has been squarely rejected by the Colorado 13 Court of Appeals when considering identical provisions of its Uniform Act, stating that such 14 maintenance duties “have no bearing on the Association’s standing under the CCIOA.” 15 Heritage Village Owners Ass’n Inc. v. Golden Heritage Investors, Ltd., 89 P.3d 513, 515 (Colo.
16 App. 2004). Moreover, the Heritage Village court recognized that even if a conflict existed, 17 “the CCIOA prevails over any inconsistent provision in the Declaration.” Id.

18 Nevada’s UCIOA contains the identical conflict resolution language, stating: “In the 19 event of a conflict between the provisions of the declaration and the bylaws, the declaration 20 prevails except to the extent the declaration is inconsistent with this chapter.” NRS 21 116.2103(3). Thus, even if the maintenance duties of the CC&Rs created a conflict with the 22 standing provision of the UCIOA (which they do not), the UCIOA prevails.

23 D.R. Horton’s reliance on the maintenance obligations of owners to limit the powers of 24 the HOA also is misplaced because the CC&Rs expressly grant the Association the right to enter 25 individual Units to correct “unsafe,” “unsightly,” “unattractive,” or “dangerous” conditions:

26 ///

27 ///

28 ///

1 9. If any Owner shall permit any Improvement . . . to fall into 2 disrepair or to become unsafe, or unsightly, or otherwise to violate 3 this Declaration, the Board shall have the right to seek any 4 remedies at law or in equity the Association may have. In 5 addition, the Board shall have the right, but not the duty, . . . to 6 enter upon such Unit and/or Limited Common Element to make 7 such repairs or to perform such maintenance

8 (PA, Vol. Vol. IV, Exh. 6, pp. 755-848 at § 9.3).

9 D.R. Horton's own CC&Rs thus are entirely consistent with the UCIOA's grant of 10 authority for the HOA to bring or defend claims involving the residential buildings and 11 individual units. The fact that the residences have zero lot lines fabricated into the CC&Rs does 12 not shield the defects from affecting the common interest community.

13 The need for homeowners associations to be able to bring or defend claims impacting 14 residential units is also evident in the present housing market. This has resulted in some 15 residential units being abandoned by owners or foreclosed on by lending institutions. If there is 16 no viable owner of a unit due to abandonment or foreclosure, or if an owner refuses to seek a 17 remedy, the Association must be able to take action to ensure that the individual residence does 18 not negatively impact the community. This is particularly true where, as here, there are multiple 19 units in a single building sharing walls, floors, roofs, foundations, plumbing, and electrical 20 systems. If plumbing in an upper unit is defective and causes leaks to the unit below, the 21 homeowners association must have the right to bring claims against the developer to fix the 22 problem for the benefit of all owners in the building and the community. Or, if a firewall shared 23 between two units is defective, the homeowners association must have the right to bring claims 24 to repair both sides of the firewall.

25 One of the fundamental reasons individuals choose to live in a "common-interest 26 community" is precisely because an HOA has the duty to maintain the integrity and value of the 27 community. Should one or more units face serious construction defects that harm its value, the 28 HOA must be able to act to correct the defects to protect the value of the surrounding residences and the community. To eliminate the HOA's ability to protect the most essential part of the community – the residences where people live – would eviscerate the fundamental purpose of an HOA in a "common-interest community."

1 The experts in this matter have identified pervasive defects that plague High Noon at 2 Arlington Ranch. These defects not only affect the unit in which the defect is situated, but they 3 also threaten the life, safety and property values of adjacent and nearby unit owners with water 4 intrusion, electrocution, fire and a less desirable place to live. (See, PA, Vol. I, Exh. 5, pp. 157- 5 161; Vol. I-III, Exh. 5, pp. 246-738). Construction defects, wherever they may occur within 6 the common-interest community, negatively affect the property values, safety, attractiveness and 7 desirability of High Noon at Arlington Ranch. D.R. Horton's interpretation of the UCIOA, and 8 its CC&Rs, eliminates the ability of the Association to carry out its fundamental purpose. This 9 is yet another reason the lower court must be overturned.

10 3. A developer does not have the power to dictate the scope of NRS 11 116.3102(1)(d)

12 D.R. Horton drafted the CC&Rs for High Noon at Arlington Ranch to drastically 13 minimize the "common elements" of the community. Under its interpretation of NRS 14 116.3102(1)(d), the rights of the Association to bring or defend claims has been extraordinarily 15 diminished.

16 Under D.R. Horton's view, because it has shifted to each individual owner, the duty to 17 maintain and repair the foundation, footings and roof of a building it shares with other owners, it 18 has divested the Association of authority to bring claims for building defects. As a practical 19 matter, must all owners collectively bring claims if the foundation of their building cracks and 20 sinks, or if the roof leaks? Or, may one owner bring claims for all owners? Even if a single 21 owner could bring a claim for other owners, it would be extremely difficult for a single owner to 22 foot the cost of such litigation over shared defects impacting a building as a whole. Moreover, 23 the manner in which any recovery is spent creates a multitude of issues amongst the 24 homeowners. Such burden is likely insurmountable for an individual owner and D.R. Horton's 25 interpretation thus insulates it from the most serious defect claims.

26 D.R. Horton's interpretation of NRS 116.3102(1)(d) to limit an HOA's standing to 27 "common elements" thus results in granting a developer with authority to dictate the scope of 28 the UCIOA by how it defines "common elements" in CC&Rs that it drafts. The Legislature

1 does not intend to give a party, to whom its legislation regulates, the unfettered ability to define 2 the scope of the regulation. This Court should reject D.R. Horton's attempt to usurp the 3 authority of Legislature and to grant itself the power to define those claims that the HOA may 4 bring against it.

5 E. D.R. Horton May Not Challenge the Association's Standing

6 The lower court should not even have considered D.R. Horton's Motion for partial 7 summary judgment because D.R. Horton lacks standing to raise the issue of Association's 8 standing. Although most often applied to claims, the standing requirement applies equally to 9 defenses and precludes a defendant from invoking a defense meant for the protection of another.
10 See, e.g., In re Noblit, 72 F.3d 757, 759 (9th Cir. 1995) (transferees lacked standing to raise 11 debtor's homestead exemption as defense to bankruptcy trustee's proceeding to recover 12 preferential transfer of proceeds from homestead's sale); In re Estate of D'Agosto, 139 P.3d 13 1125, 1130-31 (Wash. 2006) (in probate proceedings, deceased insured's estate lacked standing 14 to challenge beneficiaries' insurable interest under insured's life insurance policy, only insurer 15 could raise defense of lack of insurable interest). Below, D.R. Horton attempted to raise the 16 standing defense for the supposed protection of the homeowners. Only High Noon at Arlington 17 Ranch owners have standing to raise this issue.

18 "Condominium unit owners comprise a little democratic sub society[.]" Hidden 19 Harbour Estates, Inc. v. Norman, 309 So. 2d 180, 182 (Fla. App. 1975). This democracy is 20 evident in NRS Chapter 116 which provides, in effect, for voter referendums on a variety of 21 topics. Among these is litigation: an owners' association may not commence, or in certain 22 instances maintain, a civil suit without a vote of unit owners.

23 NRS Chapter 116 thus makes it the unit owners' decision whether their association has 24 authority to maintain suit on their behalf. The statute makes it solely the decision of the owners 25 and their Board. their decision. NRS 116.31088(3) declares that "[n]o person other than a 26 unit's owner may request the dismissal of a civil action commenced by the association on the 27 ground that the association failed to comply with any provision of this section" (emphasis 28 added).

1 Whether an owners' association is authorized to represent individual owners is a 2 question whose answer has no effect on the rights of non-owners. In particular, non-owners 3 lack standing to challenge an owners' association's authority under NRS 116.3102(1)(d). This 4 conclusion is directly supported by the Restatement (Third) of Property (Servitudes) § 6.11 5 (2000), which states as follows:

6 Except as limited by statute or the governing documents, the 7 association has the power to institute, defend, or intervene in 8 litigation or administrative proceedings in its own name, on behalf of itself, or on behalf of member property owners in a common interest community on matters affecting the community.

9 And comment "a." to Section 6.11 is directly on point here: "If either the members on behalf of 10 whom the association sues or the association meets normal standing requirements, the question 11 whether the association has the right to bring a suit on behalf of the members is an internal 12 question, which can be raised only by a member of the association." It gives the following 13 example:

14 Association sues developer over damage to common areas and 15 individually owned units resulting from construction defects.
16 Common areas are owned by unit owners as tenants in common.
17 Association does not hold title to common property. Developer 18 moves to dismiss the complaint on the ground that Association lacks standing. Developer is not a member of the association.
Developer's motion should be denied because Association has standing to sue on behalf of its members.

19 Restatement (Third) of Property § 6.11, Illus. 1. The lower court should not have even 20 considered D.R. Horton's Motion.

21 F. The District Court Should Have Rejected D.R. Horton's Other Arguments

22 1. D.R. Horton's purported concern for individual owners was 23 misplaced

24 Under NRS Chapter 116, "the officers and members of the executive board are 25 fiduciaries" who must act on behalf of all owners. NRS 116.3103(1). Each owner has the right 26 to seek appropriate action against any person, including officers and members of the executive 27 board, who violate the provisions of NRS Chapter 116. See, NRS 116.745 to NRS 116.795.
28 Further, NRS 116.31088 provides, in pertinent part, that: "Except as otherwise provided in this

1 subsection, the association may commence a civil action only upon a vote or written agreement
2 of the owners of units to which at least a majority of the votes of the members of the association 3 are allocated.”

4 Thus, a homeowners association must not only act as a fiduciary to its members, but its 5 members also have authority to decide if a lawsuit is warranted.

6 2. Res judicata protects a defendant builder from multiple claims for 7 the same defects

8 Developers routinely argue against an association’s standing to bring construction defect 9 claims for individual residences because of purported concerns of multiple or inconsistent 10 judgments. This argument disregards the many instances in the law where there can be two or 11 more parties with standing to raise a claim for relief and that res judicata protects a defendant 12 from multiple judgments for the same injury.

13 In Executive Management, Ltd. v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 114 Nev. 823, 963 P.2d 465
14 (1998), the Court laid out the three pertinent elements for res judicata to apply: “1) the issue 15 decided in the prior litigation must be identical to the issue presented in the current action; 2) 16 the initial ruling must have been on the merits and have become final; and 3) the party against 17 whom the judgment is asserted must have been a party or in privity with a party to the prior 18 litigation.” Id. at 835. Applying the three elements here, if an association or an owner obtains a 19 judgment on a construction defect claim, the principles of res judicata would preclude the other 20 from litigating an identical claim because the association and owner are in privity with each 21 other.

22 In addition, D.R. Horton’s precise argument regarding the risk of multiple judgments 23 was considered and rejected by the Utah Supreme Court:

24 If any unit owner represented here . . . subsequently seeks to raise 25 the same issues which are now advanced by the management 26 committee, res judicata would protect these defendants from that 27 subsequent litigation. Where the management acts as the legal representative with respect to the claims here litigated, present and successive owners asserting identical claims would be barred from subjecting the defendants to multiple suits.

28 Brickyard Homeowners’ Assoc., 668 P.2d 535 at 541. The Brickyard court observed that “[i]n

1 many cases the unit owners are best represented by the management committee since the 2 amount of damage suffered to each individual owner may not warrant the legal expense each 3 would incur in seeking redress." Id. at 542. "In a nutshell, inasmuch as res judicata could be 4 relied upon in any subsequent action by the defendants, we see no basis for concern that they 5 will be exposed to multiple and inconsistent judgments." Id.

6 VI. CONCLUSION

7 The Legislature made absolutely clear, as long as a matter affects the "common-interest 8 community," a homeowners association has the power to "[i]nstitute, defend or intervene in 9 litigation or administrative proceedings" – including those matters impacting individual Units.
10 NRS 116.3102(1)(d). The Court should not read into NRS 116.3102(1)(d) a drastic limitation 11 that is not present in the statute and that is contrary to the explicit intent of its drafters. The 12 Association respectfully requests that this Court overturn the District Court and find that the 13 Association has standing to bring claims for all of the construction defects alleged in the action 14 below.
