1 2. On November 27, 1985, Petitioner was sentenced as follows: Count
2 I, Conspiracy to Commit Burglary – one (1) year in the Nevada State Prison; Count 3 II, Conspiracy to Commit Robbery – six (6) years in the Nevada State Prison, 4 concurrent to Count I; Count III, Conspiracy to Commit Murder – six (6) years in 5 the Nevada State Prison, concurrent with Count II; Count IV, Burglary – ten (10) 6 years in the Nevada State Prison, concurrent with Count III; Count V, Robbery with 7 Use of a Deadly Weapon – fifteen (15) years plus an equal and consecutive term of 8 fifteen (15) years in the Nevada State Prison, concurrent with Count IV;¹ Count VI, 9 First Degree Murder with Use of a Deadly Weapon – life with the possibility of 10 parole plus an equal and consecutive term of life with the possibility of parole, 11 consecutive to Count V; Count VII, First Degree Murder with Use of a Deadly 12 Weapon – life with the possibility of parole plus an equal and consecutive term of 13 life with the possibility of parole, consecutive to Count VI. Petitioner received three 14 hundred and forty two (342) days credit for time served.

17 3. Petitioner directly appealed his conviction on October 28, 1985, and 18 the Nevada Supreme Court affirmed the conviction on October 19, 1987, with 19 remittitur issuing on November 10, 1987.

21 4. On August 14, 2000, Petitioner filed his first petition for a writ of 22 habeas corpus, which was denied on September 28, 2000. The Court issued a 23 written order of denial on October 19, 2000. Petitioner's second petition for a writ 24 of habeas corpus was filed February 11, 2001, and denied on October 4, 2001, with 25 a written order issuing on October 18, 2001.

26
27 28

¹ Sentencing on Count V was amended on June 15, 1988, to denominate the offense Robbery with Use of a Deadly Weapon.

1 5. Petitioner filed the instant third petition on March 3, 2009,
3 contending that, in Polk v. Sandoval, 503 F.3d 903 (9th Cir. 2007), the United States
4 Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit held for the first time that Nevada's 5 "Kazalyn" jury instruction for premeditated murder violates due process. Further, he 6 contends the Ninth Circuit's subsequent Chambers v. McDaniel decision, 549 F.3d 7 1191 (9th Cir. 2008), applied Polk retroactively. Petitioner concludes he was 8 deprived of due process by being convicted for First Degree Murder based on the 9 unconstitutional Kazalyn jury instruction, which conflated the mental state elements 10 of "willful," "deliberate," and "premeditated." Procedurally, he contends that his 11 failure to challenge the jury instruction earlier is excused by the recent change in the 12 law.

14 6. On March 25, 2009, Petitioner filed a "First Amended Petition for 15 Writ of Habeas Corpus," which asserted he was convicted of aiding and abetting 16 specific intent crimes, and those convictions violate the Nevada Supreme Court's 17 decisions in Sharma v. State, 118 Nev. 648 (2002), and Mitchell v. State, 122 Nev.
18 1269 (2006). Petitioner contends the trial court instructed the jury it could convict 19 Petitioner pursuant to an aiding and abetting mode of liability, but failed to instruct 20 that it must find Petitioner possessed the specific intent that the principal or target 21 offense be committed.² To excuse any procedural default in failing to bring this

24 25 ² Petitioner incorrectly asserts he was convicted pursuant to a jury instruction incorporating the 26 "natural and probable consequences" doctrine. Petitioner's Supplemental Memorandum of Points 27 and Authorities filed on March 25, 2009, p. 9. The record reveals no such instruction was given. See 28 Jury Instruction No. 32-33. Moreover, the doctrine was only incorporated into the aiding and abetting jury instruction in 2000 with the Court's Garner v. State, 116 Nev. 770 (2000), decision.
 Nevertheless, Sharma and Mitchell's logic applies to Petitioner's case at a prima facie level because his jury was not instructed it must find Petitioner aided and abetted with the specific intent the target crimes be committed. See Sharma, 118 Nev. 648, 655-656 (2002).

1 claim earlier, Petitioner invokes the fundamental miscarriage of justice (actual 2 innocence) exception to procedural default.

4 7. On June 16, 2009, this Court ordered the State to file a return, and, 5 on July 7, 2009, the State filed its Response and Motion to Dismiss the petition. The 6 State contends the petition is time barred under NRS 34.726, and Petitioner 7 procedurally defaulted his Sharma claim by failing to file a petition within one year 8 of Mitchell applying Sharma's holding retroactively. As to Petitioner's challenge to 9 the Kazalyn jury instruction on premeditated First Degree Murder, the State argues 10 Byford v. State, 116 Nev. 215 (2000), which invalidated the Kazalyn instruction, 11 does not apply retroactively. Finally, the State contends the petition is barred by 12 statutory laches.
13

14 CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

15 1. NRS 34.726(1), governing "Limitations on time to file...", requires 16 that a petition for a writ of habeas corpus "must be filed within 1 year after entry of 17 the judgment of conviction or, if an appeal has been taken from the judgment, 18 within 1 year after the Supreme Court issues its remittitur." Late-filing of a petition 19 may be excused from procedural default if the Petitioner can establish good cause 20 for delay in bringing the claim. Id. Good cause for late-filing consists of a showing 21 that: (1) "delay is not the fault of the petitioner"; and (2) "dismissal of the petition as 22 untimely will unduly prejudice the petitioner." Id. at (1)(a)-(b).
23

24 2. NRS 34.810(2) provides: 25

26 A second or successive petition must be dismissed if the judge or 27 justice determines that it fails to allege new or different grounds for 28 relief and that the prior determination was on the merits or, if new and different grounds are alleged, the judge or justice finds that the 1 failure of the petitioner to assert those grounds in a prior petition 2 constituted an abuse of the writ.

3 3. A petitioner may file a successive petition if he can demonstrate: (1) 4 good cause for failure to present the claim or for presenting the claim again, and (2) 5 actual prejudice. NRS 34.810(3).

7 4. A petitioner fails to establish actual prejudice or that "a fundamental 8 miscarriage of justice will result from failure to consider his claims" where his 9 claims "were already decided on the merits in earlier proceedings." Mazzan v.
10 Warden, Nevada State Prison, 112 Nev. 838, 842-843 (1996). Additionally, the law 11 of the case doctrine precludes consideration of those claims. Id.

12 5. NRS 34.800 establishes a laches bar requiring dismissal where the 13 delay in filing a petition prejudices the State in trying to respond to the petition or in 14 its ability to conduct a retrial of the petitioner. Prejudice to the State is presumed 15 where more than five years have elapsed between filing of a judgment of conviction 16 or resolution of a direct appeal and filing of the petition. NRS 34.800(2). The statute 17 does not mandate dismissal if Petitioner can demonstrate any prejudice caused to the 18 State's ability to respond to the petition is excused because he "could not have had 19 knowledge [of the claims] by the exercise of reasonable diligence before the 20 circumstances prejudicial to the State occurred." NRS 34.800(1)(a). Likewise, 21 prejudice to the state's ability to retry the petitioner is excused where he 22 demonstrates "that a fundamental miscarriage of justice has occurred in the 23 proceedings resulting in the judgment of conviction or sentence." NRS 24 34.800(1)(b).

1 6. The instant petition is Petitioner's third attempt at obtaining state 2 collateral, post-conviction relief. NRS 34.810(2) requires dismissal of a second or 3 successive habeas petition if "it fails to allege new or different grounds for relief and 4 that the prior determination was on the merits..." Petitioner has the burden of 5 pleading and proving specific facts that demonstrate: (a) good cause for the 6 petitioner's failure to present the claim or for presenting the claim again; and (b) 7 actual prejudice. Petitioner's Byford-Polk claim only became viable on September 8 11, 2007, when the Ninth Circuit issued its decision.³ Petitioner's Sharma-Mitchell 9 challenge to the natural and probable consequences jury instruction only became a 10 viable legal argument on December 21, 2006, when the Nevada Supreme Court 11 issued its Mitchell v. State decision, which announced the retroactive application of 12 Sharma v. State;

13 7. Petitioner has good cause for not asserting his Byford-Polk and 14 Sharma-Mitchell claims in his prior habeas petitions because those decisions had 15 not been announced. Nevertheless, Petitioner procedurally defaulted his Byford-Polk 16 claim by failing to file his petition prior to September 11, 2008, one year after Polk 17 was decided and in which it purported to apply Byford retroactively. Likewise, 18 Petitioner procedurally defaulted his Sharma-Mitchell claim by failing to file his 19 petition prior to December 21, 2007, one year after Mitchell was decided. The 20 Nevada Supreme Court has expressly determined NRS 34.726's one-year

24 25 ³ The State claims "the underlying argument and authority relied upon in Polk has always been 26 available to Defendant and, therefore does not the [sic] provide Defendant with any new claim."
27 State's Response at 6:11-13. This argument is unavailing because, prior to Polk, the Nevada Supreme 28 Court's Garner decision expressly foreclosed the possibility of arguing Byford applies retroactively.
The State's view of claim accrual would charge habeas petitioner's with procedural default where they failed to anticipate reversal, or at least criticism of, binding Nevada Supreme Court authority.
And, conversely, this approach to claim accrual would encourage petitioners to assert claims unsupported in the well-settled jurisprudence of the Court.

1 limitations period applies to successive habeas petitions. Pellegrini v. State, 117
2 Nev. 860 (2001) (“We now specifically hold that NRS 34.726 applies to successive 3 petitions.”);

5 8. Although time-barred and successive without a showing of good 6 cause for delay, the Court considers the merits of Petitioner’s Sharma-Mitchell 7 claim because it raises the possibility Petitioner is actually innocent of aiding and 8 abetting specific intent crimes. This procedural conclusion finds special support in 9 Mitchell v. State, 122 Nev. 1269 (2006), the authority upon which Petitioner 10 challenges his conviction. In Mazzan v. Whitley, 112 Nev. 838 (1996), the Court 11 adopted the federal approach to a miscarriage of justice (actual innocence) exception 12 to procedural default in habeas litigation.⁴ In assessing whether the petitioner 13 defaulted his Sharma claim, Mitchell applied the actual innocence exception to 14 procedural default:
15

16 Even when a petitioner cannot show good cause sufficient to 17 overcome the bars to an untimely or successive petition, habeas relief 18 may still be granted if the petitioner can demonstrate that “a 19 constitutional violation has probably resulted in the conviction of one 20 who is actually innocent.” “[A]ctual innocence’ means factual 21 innocence, not mere legal insufficiency.” The conviction of a 22 petitioner who was actually innocent would be a fundamental 23 miscarriage of justice sufficient to overcome the procedural bars to 24 an untimely or successive petition.
25 122 Nev. at 1273-1274.

26
27
28

⁴ See Mazzan, 112 Nev. at 842 (“Judicial review of Mazzan’s claims for relief would nevertheless be required if Mazzan demonstrated that failure to consider them would result in a fundamental miscarriage of justice. See [Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 750 (1991)] (holding that where a state prisoner defaults federal claims in state court, federal habeas review is barred “unless the prisoner can demonstrate cause for the default and actual prejudice as a result of the alleged violation of federal law, or demonstrate that failure to consider the claims will result in a fundamental miscarriage of justice”)); see also Murray v. Carrier, 477 U.S. 478, 496 (1986) (“where a constitutional violation has probably resulted in the conviction of one who is actually innocent, a federal habeas court may grant the writ even in the absence of a showing of cause for the procedural default”); Engle v. Isaac, 456 U.S. 107, 135 (1982); Harris v. Reed, 489 U.S. 255, 262 (1989).”

1 Mitchell explicitly found that reversal of a conviction based on Sharma implicates
2 the actual innocence exception to procedural default: “Mitchell lacked the requisite 3 specific intent to kill; thus, he was actually innocent of attempted murder with the 4 use of a deadly weapon, and we vacate his conviction of that charge.” Id. at 1277 5 (emphasis added). This also rebuts the laches-based presumption of prejudice 6 asserted by the State;⁵

8 9. Conversely, there is no applicable basis for excepting Petitioner’s 9 Byford-Polk claim from procedural default. The Nevada Supreme Court has not 10 determined the actual innocence exception applies to Byford claims, and federal 11 jurisprudence addressing the exception does not support its application here. The 12 United States Supreme Court has held that a claim of actual innocence requires the 13 petitioner to put forth new evidence not presented at trial and which shows him to 14 be factually innocent:
15

16 As we have stated, the fundamental miscarriage of justice exception 17 seeks to balance the societal interests in finality, comity, and 18 conservation of scarce judicial resources with the individual interest 19 in justice that arises in the extraordinary case...To be credible, such a 20 claim requires petitioner to support his allegations of constitutional 21 error with new reliable evidence-whether it be exculpatory scientific 22 evidence, trustworthy eyewitness accounts, or critical physical 23 evidence-that was not presented at trial. Because such evidence is 24 obviously unavailable in the vast majority of cases, claims of actual 25 innocence are rarely successful.
26 Schlup v. Delo, 513 U.S. at 324.⁶

27 ⁵ Along with the limitations period and successiveness bars, Mitchell considered and rejected the 28 laches argument asserted here by the State. See Mitchell, 122 Nev. at 1274.

⁶ See also Schlup, 513 U.S. at 329 (“The meaning of actual innocence as formulated by Sawyer, and Carrier does not merely require a showing that a reasonable doubt exists in the light of the new evidence, but rather that no reasonable juror would have found the defendant guilty. It is not the district court’s independent judgment as to whether reasonable doubt exists that the standard addresses; rather the standard requires the district court to make a probabilistic determination about what reasonable, properly instructed jurors would do. Thus, a petitioner does not meet the threshold requirement unless he persuades the district court that, in light of the new evidence, no juror, acting reasonably, would have voted to find him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.”) (emphasis added).

10. Nevertheless, even assuming Petitioner's Byford-Polk claim could be saved from procedural default, it lacks merit. The Nevada Supreme Court has specifically rejected Petitioner's claim that use of a Kazalyn jury instruction deprives a defendant of due process or other constitutional rights.⁷ In Byford v. State, the Nevada Supreme Court abandoned the Kazalyn premeditation murder jury instruction, and required the district courts to apply a new instruction emphasizing the independence of each mental element, particularly the requirement that a defendant have deliberated prior to the killing. Byford 116 Nev. at 235-235.⁸ The Court reasoned the Kazalyn instruction failed to emphasize the autonomous importance of premeditated murder's "willful," "deliberate," and "premeditated" mental state sub-elements, and that the instruction deemphasized the requirement of deliberation and deliberate action, which distinguishes first-degree premeditated murder from second-degree murder. Id. at 235 ("By defining only premeditation and failing to provide deliberation with any independent definition, the Kazalyn instruction blurs the distinction between first- and second-degree murder. Greene's

⁷ Jury Instruction No. 18 provided at Petitioner's trial included the Kazalyn formulation of premeditation.

⁸ The jury instruction at issue in Kazalyn v. State instructed the following regarding the intent element of premeditated first-degree murder:

Premeditation is a design, a determination to kill, distinctly formed in the mind at any moment before or at the time of the killing.
Premeditation need not be for a day, an hour or even a minute. It may be as instantaneous as successive thoughts of the mind. If the jury believes from the evidence that the act constituting the killing has been preceded by and has been the result of premeditation, no matter how rapidly the premeditation is followed by the act constituting the killing, it is willful, deliberate and premeditated murder.

Additionally, the instruction for second degree murder was the following:

Malice aforethought does not imply deliberation or the lapse of any considerable time between the malicious intention to injure another and the actual execution of the intention but denotes rather an unlawful purpose and design in contradistinction to accident and mischance.

Kazalyn v. State, 108 Nev. 67, 75-76 (1992).

1 further reduction of premeditation and deliberation to simply ‘intent’ unacceptably 2 carries this blurring to a complete erasure.”). Notably, the Court’s decision, while 3 setting out a specific jury instruction in future cases, did not find a constitutional 4 error entitling the defendant to a new trial or other relief. In fact, the erroneous 5 Kazalyn instruction did not even feature in the Court’s cumulative error analysis 6 when determining if all the errors in aggregate (independent of and not including the 7 Kazalyn instruction) deprived the defendant of his constitutional fair trial rights. See 8 id. at 240.

10 11 11. Subsequently, in Garner v. State, 116 Nev. 770 (2000) overruled on 12 other grounds by Sharma v. State, 118 Nev. 648 (2002), and by Nika v. State, 124 13 Nev. ___, 198 P.3d 839 (2008), the Nevada Supreme Court revisited Byford v. State 14 and clarified its invalidation of the Kazalyn instruction does not apply retroactively 15 to older cases, and use of the instruction in prior cases does not constitute 16 constitutional error.⁹ The Court stated “[Byford] does not hold that giving the 17 Kazalyn instruction constituted error, nor does it articulate any constitutional 18 grounds for its decision...Instead, the opinion relies on and gives effect to the 19 relevant statutory language in NRS 200.030(1)(a)” Id. at 788. The Court emphasized 20 giving a Kazalyn instruction is not a “plain” or constitutional error:

21
22 [C]ontrary to Garner’s characterization of Byford, the opinion does 23 not hold that giving the Kazalyn instruction was error or violated any 24 constitutional rights. Indeed, we affirmed the appellant’s conviction 25 in Byford notwithstanding the use of the Kazalyn instruction. To the 26 extent that our criticism of the Kazalyn instruction in Byford means

27
28 ⁹ Garner v. State, 116 Nev. 770, 789 (2000) (“Byford does not invoke any constitutional mandate in directing that its new instructions be given in future cases, so there is no constitutional requirement that this direction have any retroactive effect...Nor do the new instructions required by Byford have any retroactive effect on convictions which are not yet final: the instructions are a new requirement with prospective force only.”).

1 that the instruction was in effect to some degree erroneous, the error 2 was not plain. Before Byford was decided, our case law was divided 3 on this issue, and several opinions of this court supported use of the 4 instruction.
Id. at 788.

5 12. In Polk v. Sandoval, the Ninth Circuit purported to invalidate Garner 6 v. State's holding that Byford does not apply retroactively. Polk 503 F.3d 903 (9th 7 Cir. 2007). In Polk, the district court gave a Kazalyn instruction, but the Nevada 8 Supreme Court, relying on Garner, found the instruction amounted to harmless 9 error. The district court instructed the jury that a finding of premeditation means a 10 murder was "willful, deliberate, and premeditated," thus conflating all of those 11 distinct mental elements into one. Id. at 910-911. The Ninth Circuit granted Polk's 12 petition for habeas corpus, finding that his "constitutional right to due process was 13 violated by the use of the Kazalyn instruction because it relieved the State of its 14 burden of proving every element of first-degree murder beyond a reasonable doubt." 15 Id. at 909. Moreover, it reasoned the Nevada Supreme Court's holding that the 16 Kazalyn instruction was not a per se constitutional error ignored the instruction's 17 violation of the defendant's federal constitutional due process rights elaborated in a 18 line of cases holding due process is violated by jury instructions relieving the State 19 of its burden to prove an essential element of a crime. Id. at 911.¹⁰

22 13. The court further held the district court's giving of the Kazalyn 23 instruction was not harmless error. The weak evidence of Polk's alleged deliberation 24 rendered the erroneous Kazalyn instruction a prejudicial error; the court stated: "In 25

27 ¹⁰ See Polk, 503 F.3d at 911 ("The [Nevada Supreme Court] failed to analyze its own observations 28 from Byford under the proper lens of Sandstrom, Franklin, and Winship, and thus ignored the law the Supreme Court clearly established in those decisions--that an instruction omitting an element of the crime and relieving the state of its burden of proof violates the federal Constitution.").

1 light of the State's exceptionally weak evidence of deliberation, we simply cannot 2 conclude that the Kazalyn error was harmless. Since we are left 'in grave doubt' 3 about whether the jury would have found deliberation on Polk's part if it had been 4 properly instructed, we conclude that the error had a substantial and injurious effect 5 or influence on the jury's verdict." Id. at 913. The court reasoned, but for the error, 6 Polk may have been convicted only of second-degree murder. Id. at 912.¹¹ After 7 Polk, the Ninth Circuit decided Chambers v. McDaniel, 549 F.3d 1191 (9th Cir.
8 2008), which also determined a trial court's giving of the Kazalyn instruction 9 deprived the defendant of due process. Id. at 1199-1200.

12 14. In Nika v. State, 124 Nev. ___, 198 P.3d 839 (2008), the Nevada 13 Supreme Court clarified the line of cases addressing the Kazalyn instruction, and 14 specifically addressed Polk. The Court concluded: "Byford has no retroactive 15 application on collateral review." Id. at 850. The Court clarified that Byford 16 represented a change in the law, and the Polk court was incorrect to assume Byford 17 reaffirmed a pre-existing rule because "the Kazalyn instruction correctly reflected 18 the law before Byford." Id. at 848. Thus, Byford applied to cases on direct appeal at 19 the time the decision was issued by the Court, but not to cases previously decided.
20 Id. at 850. The Court disavowed Garner to the extent it held Byford did not apply 21 retroactively to cases on direct appeal at the time of the decision. Id. at 850, 859.
22 Moreover, the Court expressly held that "Byford has no retroactive application on 23

25
26 ¹¹ Id. at 912 ("The evidence against Polk was not so great that it precluded a verdict of second-degree 27 murder. The State's evidence on deliberation was particularly weak. The State points to only three 28 pieces of evidence: (1) Polk had threatened and fought with Hodges about two months before the murder, (2) there was a loud argument at the scene of the murder shortly before gunshots were heard; and (3) Polk borrowed a bulletproof vest on the evening of the murder, which witnesses testified that he wore.").

1 collateral review.” Id. at 850 (citing Rippo v. State, 122 Nev. 1086, 1096-97 (2006); 2 Evans v. State, 117 Nev. 609, 643 (2001) (emphasis added)).

4 15. Nika further explained Byford “was a matter of interpreting a state 5 statute, not a matter of constitutional law.” Id. Because Byford was a statutory 6 construction decision, not a constitutional decision, it does not apply retroactively.
7 Id. at 850-851. The Court emphasized that the interpretive question of how to define 8 the intent element of first-degree murder has been answered differently throughout 9 the United States and those “different decisions demonstrate that the meaning 10 ascribed to these words is not a matter of constitutional law.” Id. In light of Nika v.
11 State, Byford’s holding is inapplicable to Petitioner’s case and does not afford him a 12 basis for relief.

14 16. Petitioner’s Sharma-Mitchell claim also lacks merit. Sharma held the 15 following: “[I]n order for a person to be held accountable for the specific intent 16 crime of another under an aiding and abetting theory of principal liability, the aider 17 or abettor must have knowingly aided the other person with the intent that the other 18 person commit the charged crime.” 118 Nev. at 655 (2002). In the case of specific 19 intent crimes, the Court discarded the natural and probable consequences doctrine 20 because “it permits conviction without proof that the accused possessed the state of 21 mind required by the statutory definition of the crime,” and holds a defendant liable 22 based on mere foreseeability. Id. at 654. It is important to note that Sharma only 23 restricted the natural and probable consequences doctrine in regard to specific intent 24 crimes. Id. (“Having reevaluated the wisdom of the doctrine, we have concluded 25 that its general application in Nevada to specific intent crimes is unsound...”); 26
27
28

3 17. The Court must conclude that Sharma and Mitchell do not provide a 4 basis for granting Petitioner relief from his convictions. First, Petitioner's conviction 5 for Robbery with Use of a Deadly Weapon is not affected by Sharma because the 6 Court's holding only applies to what is required for a defendant to be "held 7 accountable for the specific intent crime of another under an aiding and abetting 8 theory of principal liability." Id. at 655 (emphasis added). As explained below, 9 Robbery is not a specific intent crime. See Chappell v. State, 114 Nev. 1403, 1408 10 (1998) ("The [Robbery] statute does not require that the force or violence be 11 committed with the specific intent to commit robbery.") Thus, Sharma is 12 inapplicable to Petitioner's conviction for Robbery with Use of a Deadly Weapon; 13

14 18. As to the specific intent crimes charged, Petitioner's conviction for 15 First Degree Murder With Use of a Deadly Weapon is supported by his conviction 16 for the predicate felony of Robbery with Use of a Deadly Weapon, independently of 17 any showing that he premeditated, deliberated, and willfully intended that his 18 confederates kill the victim. Robbery is a general intent crime. See, e.g., Daniels v.
19 State, 114 Nev. 261, 269 (1998) ("Robbery is a general intent crime, so Daniels' 20 claimed incapacity to form specific intent would not shield him from culpability for 21 robbery and concomitant culpability for first-degree murder under the felony murder 22 rule."). "[T]he commission of a felony and premeditation are merely alternative 23 means of establishing the single mens rea element of first degree murder." Holmes 24 v. State, 114 Nev. 1357, 1363-64 (1998) (citing Schad v. Arizona, 501 U.S. 624, 25
26
27
28

630-45 (1991) (plurality opinion)). Petitioner's jury was instructed as to the felony murder rule. See Jury Instruction No. 18.

19. Finally, Petitioner's conviction for Conspiracy to Commit Burglary, Conspiracy to Commit Robbery, and Conspiracy to Commit Murder are not vitiated by Sharma because the jury's verdict on those Counts was supported by evidence consistent with commission as a principal rather than mere aiding and abetting. Conspiracy is a specific intent crime. Garner v. State, 116 Nev. 770, 786 (2000), overruled on other grounds by Sharma v. State, 118 Nev. 648 (2002). While the question has not been addressed in Nevada, numerous federal Circuit Courts of Appeal have determined a person may be liable for conspiracy based only on aiding and abetting.¹² The record in this case, however, reveals the jury was provided with more than sufficient evidence that Petitioner was directly involved in forming the agreements to commit Robbery, Burglary, and Murder. See Trial Transcript at 1770:3-1771:10; 1773:18-1775:3; 1776:6-14; 1785:23-1787:16. Thus, he was liable under a theory of committing conspiracy as a principal, as opposed to being held responsible only on a theory of accomplice liability through aiding and abetting. Because the jury was presented with alternative theories of liability (and evidence supporting those theories), the record belies Petitioner's claim that it is more ¹² The Ninth Circuit has determined a person may be held liable for aiding and abetting a conspiracy, including aiding and abetting the formation of a conspiracy. U.S. v. Portac, Inc., 869 F.2d 1288 (9th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 845 (1990); see also id. (citing U.S. v. Lane, 514 F.2d 22 (9th Cir. 1975)); see also Cook v. United States, 354 F.2d 529 (9th Cir. 1965) (upholding as supported by sufficient evidence defendant's conviction for aiding and abetting conspiracy to smuggle marijuana). Several other U.S. Circuit Courts of Appeal have held a person can be liable for aiding and abetting a conspiracy. See United States v. Oreto, 37 F.3d 739, 751 (1st Cir. 1994), cert denied, 513 U.S. 1177 (1995) (noting that "most if not all courts to consider the issue have held that a defendant may be convicted of aiding and abetting a conspiracy."); U.S. v. Galiffa, 734 F.2d 306, 310 (7th Cir. 1984) (concluding that "if one can aid and abet a robbery, one can also aid and abet a conspiracy, which is a separate offense in and of itself."); U.S. v. Walker, 621 F.2d 163, 166 (5th Cir. 1980) (rejecting the view that one cannot aid and abet a conspiracy because both are "inchoate offenses").

1 probable than not a jury would not have convicted him but for the court's failure to 2 instruct the jury it must find Petitioner possessed the specific intent that the target 3 crimes be committed.
