ORDER DENYING PETITION FOR EXTRAORDINARY WRIT RELIEF

Petitioner Kim Blandino has filed an emergency petition seeking various forms of extraordinary writ relief. The decision to issue extraordinary writ relief "is solely within this court's discretion," and as petitioner, Blandino bears the burden of establishing that such extraordinary relief is warranted. Halverson v. Miller, 124 Nev. 484, 487, 186 P.3d 893, 896 (2008).

19-30905

Having reviewed the petition and supporting documents, much of which prematurely seeks relief, we conclude that our extraordinary intervention is not warranted and

ORDER the petition DENIED.[1]

[1]We note that Blandino's failure to properly serve respondents and real parties in interest constitutes an additional basis on which to deny relief; as it affects the right to due process, the requirement to properly serve parties will not be suspended under NRAP 2. See NRAP 21(a)(1); NRAP 25.

Further, to the extent Blandino requests relief related to his appeal in Docket No. 76794, we note that that portion of the petition was retained by the supreme court to be addressed in that case. See Blandino v. Herndon, Docket No. 79191 (July 19, 2019, Order).
