SUPPLEMENTAL AUTHORITIES

Pursuant to N.R.A.P. 31(e), Ali Shahrokhi "Appellant", notifies the Court of the following supplemental authorities.

1. On August 17, 2021 the 3rd Circuit Federal Appellate Court in Drummond v. Robinson Township, No. 20-1722 (3d Cir. 2021).

The Court held that:

"If this historical inquiry reveals that a law interferes with the Second Amendment, it must satisfy the same type of searching tests we use to safeguard First Amendment freedoms. Heller rules out rational-basis review as too feeble to preserve specific, enumerated rights, like the right to bear arms. Instead, it requires that challenged laws survive some form of heightened scrutiny, whether strict or intermediate."

"To survive intermediate scrutiny, a law must clear two hurdles. First, it must serve a "significant, substantial, or important government interest. Second, the fit between the asserted interest and the challenged law must be reasonable and may not burden more conduct than is reasonably necessary. Though we owe substantial deference to local zoning decisions, restrictions on conduct within the scope of the Second Amendment must still satisfy these requirements."

This relates to Appellant's brief on page 65, Nevada custody statutes are unconstitutional. See a copy of this full decision as "Exhibit A", attached to this supplement.
