8 _____/
9 RESPONDENT'S ANSWERING BRIEF

10 I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

11 This is a direct appeal from a judgment of conviction and 12 imposition of sentence by the Second Judicial District Court.
13 Appellant Vanisi was charged with first degree murder and several 14 other offenses stemming from the murder of University Police 15 Sergeant George Sullivan, the theft of Sullivan's gun, and the use 16 of the gun to rob convenience stores. The first trial resulted in 17 a mistrial upon the defense motion when it came to light that the 18 defense had fashioned their strategy around a single clerical error 19 in an unofficial transcript. 17 ROA 923.

20 The jury in the second trial found Vanisi guilty of all 21 charges and sentenced him to death. The court imposed additional 22 sentences for the other offenses. This appeal followed.

23 II. STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

24 In the days preceding the murder of Sergeant Sullivan, 25 appellant Vanisi announced his intent to kill a police officer. He 26 went shopping for an appropriate weapon. He rejected a gun when he

1 learned that he would need a license. So, he settled on a hatchet.
2 22 ROA 654; see also, references in the Opening Brief at p.6, n.8.

3 In the early morning hours of January 13, 1998, Vanisi 4 brought his plan to fruition. He disguised himself and travelled 5 to the campus of the University of Nevada. He watched Sergeant 6 Sullivan conducting a traffic investigation. He waited in the 7 shadows until Sullivan completed that task. He watched as Sullivan 8 moved his car to an area with better light where some police 9 officers liked to complete their paperwork. He crept up on the car 10 and knocked on the window. When Sullivan lowered the window and 11 asked if he could assist, Vanisi lashed out with the hatchet. 25
12 ROA 975-979.¹ Over and over he smashed the officer's face and head 13 with the hatchet. With one of the blows, Vanisi's hatchet sliced 14 through Sullivan's eyes. See generally, 22 ROA 520-542.

15 Vanisi took the officer's Sam Brown belt with its gun and 16 other devices. He used the gun to rob two stores. 23 ROA 850-51; 17 861-64. Before the robberies, he stole a car. 23 ROA 841-42.
18 Afterwards, he fled to Utah. 25 ROA 909-910. He was apprehended
19 at a relative's home in Utah when Utah police used a non-lethal 20 bean-bag gun to disable him. 25 ROA 951-52. He was then returned 21 to Nevada to stand trial.

22 Before the trial, there were several in camera hearings 23 from which the prosecutor was excluded. The transcripts of those

24 ¹For the sake of brevity, this summary is taken from Vanisi's
25 confession to a relative. There was a wealth of corroborating 26 evidence adduced at the trial but it is not necessary to describe it in detail.

1 hearings have been sealed by order of the district court. See ROA
2 (transcripts of June 23, 1999; August 3, 1999; August 26, 1999;
3 September 20, 1999, September 27, 1999.) Because those transcripts
4 cover areas protected by the attorney-client privilege, the State 5 has been denied access to them and must argue this appeal with one 6 hand tied behind its back.

7 The second trial was set for September 7, 1999. In 8 August, 1999, Vanisi filed a motion for leave to represent himself.
9 5 ROA 1300-1303. The court conducted a hearing, made extensive 10 findings of fact, and denied the motion. 5 ROA 1333-1418. Among 11 other things, the court noted that Vanisi admitted that he made the 12 decision to represent himself on January 16, 1998, two days after 13 his arrest, but had purposely delayed bringing the motion until 14 what Vanisi perceived as the last viable moment. 5 ROA 1360; 5 ROA
15 1246-47. The delay occurred despite the fact that in November, 16 1998, the court cautioned Vanisi that a motion for self-17 representation must be brought in a timely fashion. 3 ROA 785-86.
18 Even after Vanisi reached his decision, noted the court, he had 19 asserted contrary positions in an apparent attempt to delay the 20 proceedings. For instance, on June 18, 1999, Vanisi filed a motion 21 not seeking to represent himself, but instead seeking to discharge 22 his counsel and to have new counsel appointed. 4 ROA 999-1008. He 23 did that even though he had already decided to represent himself at 24 trial.

25 Similarly, in November, 1998, he specifically denied any 26 desire to represent himself and announced that he would continue

1 with his trial counsel "for this time." 4 ROA 785. This, despite 2 the fact, as noted by the district court, that he had already 3 decided to represent himself. In that same time frame he denied 4 knowing his options, but in the next breath acknowledged that he 5 had the right to represent himself. 3 ROA 801. Finally, in that 6 same hearing, Vanisi went so far as to seek advice from the court 7 regarding how best to delay the trial. 3 ROA 807. Thus, the 8 district court concluded that Vanisi was deliberately misleading 9 the court by purposefully delaying presenting his motion for self-10 representation until some 20 months after he had made his decision.

11 In the hearing concerning the motion to represent 12 himself, Vanisi announced his intent to seek legal advice from 13 other inmates and from his "counselor" at the jail and from his 14 stand-by counsel. 5 ROA 1338. Although he later denied the intent 15 to induce others into the unauthorized practice of law, the court
16 appears to have believed that Vanisi was being less than honest 17 about his intent.

18 Vanisi also appears to have assumed that the district 19 court would appoint stand-by counsel with whom he could consult.
20 5 ROA 1339. Although he nominally acknowledged that appointment of 21 such counsel was "discretionary," he gave no indication that he 22 understood that the refusal to appoint such counsel was also 23 discretionary. 5 ROA 1370. Thus, it may well have been that his 24 motion for self-representation was equivocal or conditional. It 25 may have been founded on the assumption that he would have stand-by 26 counsel.

1 Vanisi denied that he intended to use self-representation
2 as a means to delay or disrupt the trial, but the trial court, 3 after commenting on the demeanor and deportment of Vanisi, found 4 that was indeed his intent despite his denials. 5 ROA 1247.

5 In reporting on the defendant's competency in June, 1999,
6 two doctors opined that Vanisi was "malingering." Thus, it appears 7 that Vanisi was trying to mislead the court in that manner as 8 well.²

9 At the hearing on the motion for self-representation, 10 Vanisi also revealed that his motion was equivocal in that he 11 assumed that if he were allowed to represent himself, then security 12 measures would be altered, and he would have the same freedom to 13 move about the courtroom as would the prosecutor. Even after the 14 court cautioned him on that point, he continued to demonstrate that 15 he believed he would be entitled to be relieved of security
16 precautions exactly to the same extent as the prosecutor. 5 ROA 17 1377; 5 ROA 1249-50; 1255.

18 At the hearing, Vanisi claimed that he had a tactical 19 reason for seeking self-representation. The court indicated that 20 no tactical advantage was obvious and that the court feared the 21 true reason for self-representation by Vanisi would be to allow 22 improper conduct. 5 ROA 1374-75. However, even in the face of the 23 strong indication that the court suspected his true tactical 24 motivation was to allow disruption, Vanisi could not identify any 25 ²The psychiatric reports should be found in the sealed 26 exhibits included in the record. They are described at 4 ROA 1073.

1 tactical reason for his decision in even the most general way. 5
2 ROA 1375-76. As a consequence of that and other considerations, it 3 appears that the true strategy of Vanisi was to enable himself to 4 delay and disrupt the proceedings, and to bring about yet another 5 mistrial. At the hearing on the motion for self-representation, 6 the court also reviewed (but did not rely upon) a certain 7 videotape, exhibit "A," in which Vanisi predicted yet another 8 mistrial. 5 ROA 1383-1390; 5 ROA 1254. The court noted that 9 Vanisi's "demeanor and verbal behavior" on the tape was consistent 10 with prior hearings. 5 ROA 1254. Those prior hearings include 11 those from which the prosecutor was excluded.

12 After the hearing on the motion for self-representation, 13 the district court made extensive findings of fact. The court 14 found, inter alia, that despite his protestations to the contrary, 15 Vanisi intended to use his self-representation to delay and disrupt 16 the proceedings. 5 ROA 1247. Accordingly, the court denied the 17 motion for self-representation. Trial proceeded and Vanisi was 18 convicted.

19 III. ARGUMENT

20 A. A TRIAL COURT, IN EVALUATING A MOTION FOR SELF-21 REPRESENTATION, IS NOT REQUIRED BY ANY RULE OF LAW TO 22 ACCEPT THE REPRESENTATIONS OF THE DEFENDANT AT FACE
23 VALUE.

24 Vanisi argues that the district court erred in denying 25 his motion for self-representation. He appears to take the 26 position that there was no evidence supporting the conclusion that he intended to delay and disrupt the proceedings. The State

1 disagrees.

2 A criminal defendant apparently enjoys two inconsistent 3 rights: the right to counsel and the right to proceed without 4 counsel. Faretta v. California, 422 U.S. 806, 95 S.Ct. 2525
5 (1975). The law creates a presumption in favor of the former and 6 against the latter because the right to counsel attaches even 7 without any request from the defendant. United States v. Arlt, 41
8 F.3d 516, 520 (quoting Brewer v. Williams, 430 U.S. 387, 404, 97 9 S.Ct. 1232, 51 L.Ed.2d 424 (1977)).³

10 The right to self-representation has been described as an 11 "unqualified" right. Baker v. State, 97 Nev. 634, 636, 637 P.2d 12 1217, 1218 (1981). Nevertheless, it appears that the right is not 13 absolute, and that there are occasions when a trial court may 14 refuse the request and require the defendant to proceed with the 15 benefit of counsel. The circumstances are narrow. Generally, a 16 competent defendant may represent himself. However, the Supreme 17 Court has noted that "the trial judge may terminate self-18 representation by a defendant who deliberately engages in serious 19

20 ³The basic proposition that a defendant enjoys the right to 21 self-representation has been called into question of late. See 22 United States v. Farhad, 190 F.3d 1097, 1101 (9th Cir. 1999)
23 (Reinhardt, J., concurring). See also, Martinez v. Court of Appeal 24 of California, ___ U.S. ___, 120 S.Ct. 684 (2000) (in the course of 25 declaring that there was no right of self-representation on appeal, 26 the Court noted that the basis for Faretta, infra, was questionable). While it is not necessary to the instant case, the State invites this Court to adopt the reasoning of Judge Reinhardt and to hold that Faretta was wrongly decided and should be overturned.

1 and obstructionist misconduct." Faretta n.46. In addition, the 2 Court noted in the same breath that "[t]he right of self-3 representation is not a license to abuse the dignity of the 4 courtroom. Neither is it a license not to comply with relevant 5 rules of procedural and substantive law." Id. The high court
6 reiterated this point in McKaskle v. Wiggins, 465 U.S. 168, 173, 7 104 S.Ct. 944 (1984), noting that "an accused has a Sixth Amendment 8 right to conduct his own defense, provided only that he knowingly 9 and intelligently forgoes his right to counsel and that he is able 10 and willing to abide by rules of procedure and courtroom protocol."
11 (emphasis added).

12 In predicting if a defendant will represent himself while 13 adhering to customary courtroom protocol, a trial court can and 14 should properly consider pre-trial behavior of the defendant.
15 Tanksley v. State, 113 Nev. 997, 1001, 946 P.2d 148, 150 (1997).
16 See also; United States v. Flewitt, 874 F.2d 669 (9th 1989) ("if the 17 district judge determines that the defendants' request is part of 18 a pattern of dilatory activity," the court may require the 19 defendant to proceed on scheduled day, with counsel or in proper 20 person.); Stewart v. Corbin, 850 F.2d 492 (9th Cir 1998) (decision 21 based on several factors including violent acts in jail). Here, 22 the trial court noted Vanisi's violent disciplinary problems in the 23 jail, causing his removal to the prison, and the similar problems 24 within the prison itself. As the court noted, Vanisi's "aggressive 25 and disruptive behavior" in the prison and the jail led the court 26 to anticipate that Vanisi would utilize his self-representation to 1 disrupt the trial. 5 ROA 1249.

2 The court also commented upon Vanisi's inability or 3 unwillingness to act in accordance with courtroom protocol. The 4 district court noted that at previous hearings Vanisi had "blurted
5 out statements in a loud voice and interrupted this court." 5 ROA 6 1248. The court also commented on Vanisi asking the court to 7 repeat the same question "many times" and on his refusal to answer 8 questions when he took issue with the court's grammatical 9 construction of the question. The court noted that Vanisi had a 10 tendency to speak out loud to himself as though addressing the 11 courtroom audience. The court had observed Vanisi making state-
12 ments under his breath while others were speaking. 5 ROA 1248-13 1249.

14 The court also commented on Vanisi's "standing up and 15 engaging in unsettling rocking motions." Id. The district court 16 concluded the combinations of words and gestures gave rise to the 17 court's concern about future disruptions.

18 This Court has previously noted the importance of the 19 demeanor and deportment of a defendant in deciding a Faretta 20 motion. Tanksley, supra. The Ninth Circuit agrees:

21 "[T]he appellate court is not in as favorable 22 a position as the trial court to determine the 23 effect of the defendant's disruptive conduct 24 on the proceedings. Even though facial 25 expressions, gestures, and other nonverbal 26 conduct are significant, they cannot be transcribed by the court reporter. Also, the reaction of jurors and witnesses is easily observed by the trial judge but seldom appears in the written record. Therefore, great deference must be given to the decision of the 1 trial court." Stewart v. Corbin, 850 F.2d

2 492, 497-98 (9th Cir. 1988).

3 A court may also deny a Faretta motion, even if timely,
4 where the defendant's purpose is to delay the proceedings.
5 Tanksley, supra. Furthermore, no rule of law requires the court to 6 take the defendant's protestations that he will be ready on the 7 designated date at face value. If a court anticipates that the 8 defendant's true motive is to secure a delay, the court may deny 9 the motion for self-representation. The district court noted that 10 Vanisi had filed a motion for the appointment of new counsel
11 despite having already decided to represent himself. The court 12 also commented upon Vanisi's prior attempts to secure delays in the 13 trial as evidence of his true intent.

14 In Fitz v. Spalding, 682 F.2d 782, 784 (9th Cir. 1982), 15 the court held that the determination of whether the defendant 16 intends his Faretta motion as a delaying tactic is a question of 17 fact addressed to the trial court. The trial court should consider 18 such factors as whether the Faretta motion is accompanied by a 19 motion to continue, prior efforts to delay the trial, and "whether 20 the defendant could reasonably be expected to have made the motion 21 at an earlier time." Id. Here, while the motion was accompanied 22 by Vanisi's claim that he would not be seeking a continuance later, 23 the fact that he had purposefully delayed bringing his motion for 24 some 20 months, until what he perceived to be the last possible 25 moment, coupled with the prior efforts to delay the trial, led the 26 trial court to determine as a matter of fact that Vanisi's motion,

1 even if timely, was made with the intent to delay the proceedings
2 and not in good faith. As noted above, that factual determination, 3 the decision regarding what inferences are to be drawn from the 4 evidence, is reserved to the district court. That is especially 5 true where the factors noted by the court, the rocking, the 6 muttering, the speaking out of turn in a "loud" voice, are not 7 matters that are readily qualifiable or quantifiable.

8 The cold transcript of the Faretta canvass reads as 9 though Vanisi might have been sincere. As this court has so often 10 noted, however, a transcript is necessarily deficient because of 11 what it does not reveal. Graves v. State, 112 Nev. 118, 124, 912
12 P.2d 234, 238 (1996). Military courts have expressly recognized 13 that words are but a small part of a conversation and that tone, 14 tenor, demeanor, and deportment can change innocuous words into a 15 criminal act. United States v. Najera, 52 M.J. 247 (2000).
16 Similar concepts are found in popular culture when comedians become 17 obvious outrageous liars.

18 There is an additional reason to believe that the court 19 correctly determined that Vanisi intended to use his self-20 representation for some sort of misconduct. Within days of the 21 Order denying Vanisi's Faretta motion, the Public Defender's Office 22 filed a motion to withdraw, citing an irreconcilable dispute with 23 Vanisi. According to the affidavit attached thereto, Vanisi 24 categorically refused to participate in presenting any lawful 25 defense and insisted on a defense that was not supported by the 26

1 evidence and would violate SCR 166. 5 ROA 1499.⁴ In United States
2 v. Flewitt, supra, 874 F.2d at 675, the court ruled that "[a] 3 defendant proceeding pro se, or requesting to proceed pro se, is 4 subject to the same good faith limitations imposed on lawyers, as 5 officers of the court." Because it appears that Vanisi was 6 attempting to do by himself that which would have been forbidden to 7 a lawyer, it appears that the court was correct in its factual
8 determination regarding Vanisi's intent.

9 Given the standard of review and the fact-intensive 10 nature of the inquiry, this Court should rule that the trial
11 court's ruling must be affirmed because the court's legal analysis 12 was correct, and the trial court's prediction that Vanisi would be 13 disruptive and attempt to delay the proceedings is not clearly 14 untenable.

15 The district court, in denying the motion, also relied on 16 the fact that the case was too complex for Vanisi. Indeed, the 17 court noted that Vanisi did not appear to understand the 18 relationship between the various charges. 5 ROA 1253. In a murder 19 case, the relationship between the charges is of great importance 20 because a first degree murder conviction may be had on a felony 21 murder theory.

22
23 ⁴This motion was also denied, and this Court denied a 24 subsequent petition for writ of mandamus. See Vanisi v. District 25 Court, Docket No. 34771, Order Denying Petition dated September 10, 26 1999. The State has been denied access to the transcript of the hearing on that motion as well, and must just blindly refer the Court to the sealed transcripts for evidence of the true nature of the conflict.

1 This Court has followed other courts in ruling that a 2 Faretta motion may be denied in rare cases where the case is so 3 complex that the need for a fair trial overrides the defendant's 4 interests in representing himself. Lyons v. State, 106 Nev. 438, 5 796 P.2d 210 (1990).⁵ Some may see a tension between that ruling 6 and the general rule that a defendant's ability to represent 7 himself well is irrelevant. The State contends that the two lines 8 of cases may be reconciled by noting that in a very complex case, 9 the waiver of counsel may not be a knowing and voluntary waiver if 10 the defendant does not or cannot understand the nature of the task 11 that he proposes to undertake. Therefore, the ruling that the 12 motion would be denied because the case was too complex for Vanisi 13 to understand should also be affirmed.

14 A Faretta motion may also be denied when it is ambiguous
15 or conditional. Lyons, 106 Nev. at 443-444. Here, the apparent 16 assumption by Vanisi that he would have stand-by counsel, and that 17 the court would allow him the same freedom of movement about the 18 courtroom as was enjoyed by the prosecutor tends to show that the 19 request was ambiguous or conditional.

20 The State also suggests that this Court might wish to 21 inquire into the procedural aspects of a Faretta motion. As a 22 general rule, even where constitutional rights are at stake, state 23 procedural law governs the manner in which those rights are to be 24

25 ⁵Indeed, it may be error to grant a Faretta motion where the 26 record reveals that the defendant does not wholly understand the ramifications of his decision.

1 asserted. See Williams v. Florida, 399 U.S. 78, 90 S.Ct. 1893
2 (1970) (upholding Florida's "notice of alibi" rule). See also,
3 Bargas v. Burns, 179 F.3d 1207 (9th Cir. 1999) (claim of violation 4 of constitutional right to effective assistance barred for non-5 compliance with Nevada procedural rules for advancing such claims).

6 This Court appears to have ruled that a Faretta motion 7 may be properly brought up until the day of trial. Lyons, 106 Nev.
8 at 445. However, the Court was drawing from the teachings of other 9 cases and appears to have operated on the assumption that such a 10 rule was required by the Constitution. The State contends that 11 this Court may fashion procedural rules governing Faretta motions 12 so long as those rules do not unduly burden the Constitutional 13 right at stake.

14 At least one court had held that where a defendant, while 15 aware of his options, clearly elects to proceed with the benefit of 16 counsel and then months later makes a motion for self-17 representation, such a defendant must show "good cause" for 18 discharging his counsel and proceeding in proper person. U.S. v.
19 Reddeck, 22 F.3d 1504, 1511 (10th Cir. 1994). This decision is 20 consistent with other well-established procedural rules. For 21 instance, where the defendant pleads guilty and thereby waives the 22 most basic of rights, the right to trial, the trial court may bind 23 him to that decision unless he demonstrates some good cause for 24 being relieved of the decision. See Woods v. State, 114 Nev. 468, 25 958 P.2d 91 (1998) (motion to withdraw guilty plea, made before 26 sentencing, was properly denied).

1 Of course, in most cases the record will not reflect a 2 conscious decision to elect between the competing rights. In most 3 cases, appointment (or retention) of counsel will occur automat-4 ically with no discussion on the record of the opposite right - the 5 right to self-representation. In the instant case, however, where 6 the record reveals a discussion of the competing rights between the 7 court and the defendant, and the defendant explicitly elected to 8 proceed with counsel, then this Court should rule that by state law 9 the defendant may be bound by that decision. The court may, in its 10 discretion, allow the defendant to change his mind, and upon a 11 showing of good cause, the court must allow the change. However, 12 this Court should rule that where the defendant shows no cause for 13 his change of heart, the court may deny a subsequent motion for 14 self-representation, and such a ruling will not be disturbed absent 15 an abuse of discretion.

16 Whether the Court analyzes this case from a procedural or 17 substantive standpoint, or both, the Court should find no error in 18 the denial of the Faretta motion, and affirm the judgment of the 19 Second Judicial District Court,

20 B. THE STATUTORILY REQUIRED INSTRUCTION
21 DEFINING THE CONCEPT OF A REASONABLE DOUBT 22 DOES NOT UNCONSTITUTIONALLY DILUTE THE 23 GOVERNMENT'S BURDEN OF PROOF.

24 Vanisi next takes issue with the standard instruction 25 defining the concept of a "reasonable doubt." The instruction has 26 been approved countless times. Chambers v. State, 113 Nev. 974, 944 P.2d 805 (1997); Evans v. State, 112 Nev. 1172, 926 P.2d 265

1 (1996); Quillen v. State, 112 Nev. 1369, 929 P.2d 893 (1996);
2 Bollinger v. State, 111 Nev. 1110, 901 P.2d 671 (1995). Further,
3 in Ramirez v. Hatcher, 136 F.3d 1209 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 525
4 U.S. 967, 119 S.Ct. 415, 142 L.Ed.2d 337, (1998), the United States
5 Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit upheld the constitutionality 6 of NRS 175.211(1). Accordingly, the judgment should be affirmed.

7 C. THE DEATH SENTENCE IS NOT EXCESSIVE.

8 Vanisi next raises three separate arguments under a 9 single banner. He first contends that the jury was not justified 10 in finding one of the aggravating circumstances; that the jury's 11 failure to enumerate the mitigating circumstances demonstrates some 12 sort of error and, as a consequence, the death penalty is 13 excessive. The State contends that there is adequate evidence 14 supporting the finding that the murder involved mutilation; that 15 because jurors need not unanimously agree on mitigating 16 circumstances there is no need for the jury to enumerate each 17 mitigating circumstance considered by each separate juror, and, the 18 death penalty is not excessive.

19 First comes the question of whether the record supports 20 the finding that the murder involved mutilation. This finding made 21 the first degree murder an aggravated murder by virtue of NRS
22 200.033(8). Vanisi has not questioned the jury instructions and so 23 it appears that he is questioning whether substantial evidence 24 supports the finding of the jury. See Sonner v. State, 112 Nev.
25 1328, 1346, 930 P.2d 707, 719 (1996) (aggravator will be upheld 26

1 where supported by substantial evidence).⁶

2 This Court has ruled that "the term 'mutilate' means to 3 cut off or permanently destroy a limb or essential part of the 4 body, or to cut off or alter radically so as to make imperfect."
5 Deutscher v. State, 95 Nev. 669, 677, 601 P.2d 407, 412-13 (1979), 6 vacated on other grounds, 500 U.S. 901, 111 S.Ct. 1678, 114 L.Ed.2d 7 73 (1991). The State contends that the jury, given that 8 instruction, had ample evidence by which to find that the murder 9 involved mutilation.

10 The record reveals that Vanisi smashed his hatchet into 11 the head and face of Sergeant Sullivan at least 20 times. 22 ROA
12 at 527. He used each part of the tool, including the nail puller.
13 22 ROA at 536. He used it to destroy every part of Sullivan's 14 head, coming at him from every angle. 22 ROA 535. Every bone in 15 his head was smashed. There was "massive fracturing that involved 16 the orbits on both sides of the face, the mandible, the nasal
17 bones, and both sides of the maxilla." 22 ROA at 531. Vanisi 18 broke out most of Sergeant Sullivan's teeth, knocking some teeth 19 completely outside of his body. 22 ROA 532. The autopsy revealed 20 massive damage to the bones in the face, the soft tissue
21 surrounding the eyes, and indeed, to the eye surface itself. One 22 blow to Sullivan's forehead cut the skull itself very deeply and 23

24 ⁶The jury found other aggravating circumstances as well, but 25 those are not at issue in this appeal. Even if this Court agreed 26 that the mutilation factor was inappropriate, this Court should re-weigh the undisputed aggravating circumstances and affirm the sentence. See Canape v. State, 109 Nev. 864, 859 P.2d 1023 (1993).

1 lifted the top part of the skull off the rest of it. 22 ROA 536.
2 In addition, there was evidence that after Vanisi reduced 3 Sullivan's head to pulp, he felt the need to further kick his 4 victim several times. 22 ROA 538; 25 ROA 980.

5 Vanisi slammed his hatchet into Sullivan's head, into his 6 brain, some twenty times, any of which would have been fatal within 7 moments of the blow. 22 ROA 539. Under less severe circumstances, 8 this Court has found that the jury was entitled to find that the 9 murder involved mutilation. Brown v. State, 113 Nev. 305, 933 P.2d 10 187 (1997); Parker v. State, 109 Nev. 383, 849 P.2d 1062 (1993).
11 The Court should make the same ruling in this case.

12 Vanisi also makes much of the fact the verdict forms did 13 not detail the mitigating circumstances considered by the jury.
14 Jurors are properly instructed to list the aggravating 15 circumstances that they find because such findings must be 16 unanimous. Geary v. State, 114 Nev. 100, 952 P.2d 431 (1998). In 17 contrast, mitigating circumstances are defined in a very personal 18 way as any reason to spare the life of the defendant. Therefore, 19 the jurors need not agree on what constitutes mitigating 20 circumstances and what mitigating circumstances exist. Id. 114
21 Nev. at 105. Thus, the State contends that there is no inference 22 to be drawn from the failure of the jury to list the mitigating 23 circumstances, if any existed, that each juror personally found.
24 A single juror may find it to be slightly mitigating that Vanisi
25 did not completely decapitate Sergeant Sullivan. However, no 26 instruction required or even implied to the jurors that each should

1 reveal such personal thoughts as what circumstance constituted a 2 reason to consider sparing the life of the accused.

3 The remaining question is whether this Court should rule
4 as a matter of law that the death penalty is excessive. No
5 extensive comment is necessary on this subject. Considering all 6 the circumstances, including the nature of the crime and Vanisi's 7 violent and aggressive behavior in jail and in prison, Vanisi has 8 demonstrated beyond any doubt that no segment of society is safe as 9 long as he lives.

10 IV. CONCLUSION

11 While we will almost certainly see this case again when 12 Vanisi ultimately agrees to waive the attorney-client privilege by 13 asserting a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, for the 14 moment, this Court should rule that he has failed to demonstrate 15 error in the trial. The judgment of the Second Judicial District 16 Court should therefore be affirmed.
