24                                    Answering Brief at pages 38-43 on file herein, pursuant to NRAP Rule 31 (d), and in 25                                    response to Appellant's supplemental authorities.

26                                    The Ninth Circuit's recent opinion in Polk v. Sandoval, is not yet final<sup>1</sup>.
27
28

1 Therefore, it is premature to consider Polk v. Sandoval because it errs in its 2 application of federal law and may be subject to revision or reconsideration at a later 3 date. Any conceivable error in this case is harmless beyond a reasonable doubt when 4 considering the particular facts of this case.

6 I.
7 THE NINTH CIRCUIT'S DECISION IN POLK WAS 8 WRONGLY DECIDED ON FEDERAL LAW.

9 Polk v. Sandoval, 2007 WL 2597437 reaches several conclusions about the 10 constitutionality of the Kazalyn instruction in Nevada. The State proffers that the 11 Ninth Circuit has misapplied the rationale of three United States Supreme Court cases: 12 In re Winship, 397 U.S. 358 (1970), Sandstrom v. Montana, 442 U.S. 510 (1979) and 13 Francis v. Franklin, 471 U.S. 307 (1985). Furthermore, the Ninth Circuit has also 14 misapprehended Nevada case law with respect to the meaning of the Kazalyn 15 instruction and the Nevada Supreme Court's decision in Byford v. State, 116 Nev.
16 215, 994 P.2d 700 (2000).

17 In order for a federal court to avoid procedural bars under the Antiterrorism and 18 Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (AEDPA), a habeas petitioner must show that the 19 state court's adjudication of a claim upon its merits was either one, contrary to, or 20 involved an unreasonable application of established Federal Law as established by the 21 United States Supreme Court or, two, based on an unreasonable determination of the 22 facts based on the evidence in the state court proceeding. Further, a state court 23 decision is contrary only if a state court failed to apply the correct controlling 24 authority or applied the correct authority in a case involving materially 25 indistinguishable facts and reaches a different result than the United States Supreme 26 Court. In addition, the unreasonable standard means "objectively unreasonable."
27 Unreasonable does not equate to a state court erroneously or incorrectly applying 28 federal law. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362 (2000). In other words, if the state court application of federal law can be supported by a reasoned argument, it is not

1 challengeable under AEDPA.

2 The Polk court appears to avoid the AEDPA by concluding that the language in 3 the Kazalyn instruction creates either an unconstitutional mandatory conclusion or 4 rebuttable presumption in violation of Sandstrom and Francis and therefore a 5 violation of Winship occurred because the jury was permitted to convict Polk without 6 finding an element of the offense beyond a reasonable doubt. The contested language 7 is "if the jury believes...that the act constituting the killing has been preceded by and 8 has been the result of premeditation...it is willful, deliberate and premeditated 9 murder." To understand why the State contends that this is not correct, it is necessary 10 to review the holdings of these federal cases.

11 In re Winship, 397 U.S. 358 (1970), held that in every criminal case the 12 prosecution was required to prove beyond a reasonable doubt every fact necessary to 13 constitute the crime charged because this standard was a fundamental principle and 14 therefore required under due process. The Supreme Court held that this due process 15 principle applied in juvenile delinquency adjudications rejecting a state statute that 16 permitted a preponderance of the evidence standard in such cases.

17 In Sandstrom v. Montana, 442 U.S. 510 (1979), the Supreme Court had before 18 it the following instruction:

19 "[t]he law presumes that a person intends the 20 ordinary consequences of his voluntary acts."

21 The Montana State Supreme Court construed the instruction to be a rebuttable 22 presumption which shifted the burden of production of evidence to the defendant but 23 not the burden of proof. The U.S Supreme Court concluded that the test was not how 24 the Montana Supreme Court viewed the instruction, but how a reasonable juror would 25 view the instruction and it was uncontested in the case that reasonable jurors' might 26 misunderstand the instruction and believe they had to find the defendant guilty if they 27 found his actions to be voluntary and the death was an ordinary consequence of those 28 actions. The majority of the High Court also indicated it did not matter whether the

1 instruction was viewed as a mandatory conclusive presumption or a mandatory 2 rebuttable presumption.<sup>2</sup>

3 In Francis v. Franklin, 471 U.S. 307 (1985), the instructions in controversy 4 involved use of the word “presumed,” but also added additional language qualifying 5 the use of the presumptions:

6 “A crime is a violation of a statute of this State in which there shall be a 7 union of joint operation of act or omission to act, and intention or 8 criminal negligence. A person shall not be found guilty of any crime 9 committed by misfortune or accident where it satisfactorily appears there 10 was no criminal scheme or undertaking or intention or criminal 11 negligence. The acts of a person of sound mind and discretion are 12 presumed to be the product of the person’s will, but the presumption may 13 be rebutted. A person of sound mind and discretion is presumed to 14 intend the natural and probable consequences of his acts but the 15 presumption may be rebutted. A person will not be presumed to act with 16 criminal intention but the trier of facts, that is, the Jury, may find 17 criminal intention upon a consideration of the words, conduct, demeanor, 18 motive and all other circumstances connected with the act for which the 19 accused is prosecuted.”

20 The facts of that case are highly relevant. In Francis, defendant was an escapee who 21 threatened but did not shoot several people, even when those people failed to comply 22 with his orders and ultimately were released by Defendant from his control. However, 23 one person slammed a door in his face while he was holding a gun to them and 24 defendant claimed that the door slamming in his face startled him and that he just 25 squeezed the trigger instinctively and accidentally. Shortly after deliberations began 26 in Defendant’s trial for murder, the jury wanted to be reinstructed on intent and the 27 definition of accident.

28 Five Justices in that case found that the instructions established mandatory rebuttable presumptions and that a reasonable jury would not have understood that

1 these were permissive presumptions. The dissenting Justices did not agree and held 2 that the language was constitutionally permissible because of the last sentence in the 3 instructions and that no reasonable jury would understand that they must convict even 4 if they found the shooting to be accidental.

5 Here and in Polk, the Kazalyn instruction is significantly different from these 6 instructions. It does not contain any presumption language. Rather, read in its 7 entirety, as required by Sandstrom and Francis, the instruction indicates that if a 8 killing is the product of a distinctly formed design and determination to kill, then the 9 killing is willful, deliberate, and premeditated. AA XII, 2726. The instruction 10 correctly defines both premeditation and deliberation, although it only talks about 11 premeditation. Moreover, when taken in context with instructions on implied malice, 12 AA XII, 2724-25, a jury would know that first degree murder involves a cool thought 13 process, however short as opposed to an instantaneous impulsive emotional reaction 14 which would constitute second degree murder or, if additional facts warranted, 15 voluntary or involuntary manslaughter.<sup>3</sup> AA XII, 2734.

16 The State further asserts that Flanagan has not raised or preserved any challenge 17 to the Kazalyn instruction as creating an unconstitutional presumption as was 18 addressed by the Polk court. Rather, Flanagan challenges the sufficiency of the 19 Kazalyn instruction in its description of the requisite mens rea for first degree murder 20 and the refusal to give an instruction separately defining deliberation. Similarly, 21 Byford did not address the Kazalyn instruction in terms of creating an unconstitutional 22 presumption, rather, only that the instantaneous language of the instruction blurred the 23 distinction between second and first degree murder because a rash, unconsidered 24 impulsive, emotional, gut reaction is always instantaneous. In fact, that is exactly 25 what the Kazalyn court held. The Nevada Supreme Court noted the Kazalyn 26

27
28 <sup>3</sup> The Polk opinion does not take into consideration any instructions on second degree murder or manslaughter, it does not indicate the defense theory of the case and the facts it does cite, pre-murder threats, the use of a bullet-proof vest, or the fact that multiple shots fired from a gun would support premeditation and deliberation.

1 definition of premeditation and the rapidity by which such a decision can be made 2 comported with the Nevada Supreme Court's definitions of deliberate and 3 premeditated in Payne v. State, 81 Nev. 503, 406 P.2d 922 (1965). The Court further 4 noted that willful, premeditated and deliberate are three separate elements, but felt 5 Kazalyn encompassed all three and that the speed of the decision was not at issue.

6 In Payne, the Nevada Supreme Court indicated that the distinguishing 7 characteristic between second and first degree murder is the lack of impulse. An 8 impulsive act is an instantaneous reaction with no thought or consideration of the 9 consequences. The terms "design" and "determination" both contemplate a thought 10 process and the remaining Kazalyn language simply notes this thought process can be 11 virtually instantaneous. There is no reasonable likelihood that a reasonable juror 12 would mistakenly believe that the defendant could be convicted first degree murder 13 based on an impulsive, emotional reaction to kill, so long as other instructions specify 14 the correct definition of second degree murder or manslaughter.

15 Byford noted that the trouble with the Kazalyn instruction involved an over 16 emphasis on premeditation. This, combined with the Court's subsequent holding in 17 Powell v. State, 108 Nev. 700, 838 P.2d 921 (1992) that "deliberate" was redundant 18 with "premeditate" and Greene v. State, 113 Nev. 157, 931 P.2d 54 (1997) which 19 stated that "willful, deliberate and premeditated" was a single phrase denoting intent 20 to commit the act and intention that the act result in death. Thus it was not the 21 Kazalyn instruction that was the problem, but the subsequent case law and the Nevada 22 Supreme Court's concerns that this was blurring the common law distinction between 23 first and second degree murder

24 The Court noted that no definition of premeditation and deliberation ever 25 needed to be given, as these were commonly understood words with an everyday 26 meaning. As noted in Justice Maupin's concurrence, premeditation means "to think, 27 consider, or deliberate beforehand" and deliberate is "to do on purpose" or the process 28 of deliberation. The two words are so close in their ordinary meaning, that they are

1 virtually indistinguishable. Nevertheless to avoid the possibility that lower courts
2 might incorrectly conclude, based on Powell and Greene, that Nevada law no longer 3 recognized the distinction between a rash impulse and a considered course of action, 4 the Court decided it was better to set forth definitions of all three terms to be used in 5 the future while also recognizing that no definitions need be given at all.

6 The new instructions define willful as the intention to kill, thus eliminating 7 accidents or mischance. Deliberation is defined as the ability to weigh or consider 8 one's actions before shooting. It can be a short time period and the key feature is 9 either lack of passion or a "cooling off" period between the passion and the act – it 10 cannot be a rash unconsidered impulse. Premeditation is a distinct design to kill and 11 again it can be formed instantaneously but is distinguished from the unconsidered rash 12 impulsive decision that constitutes second degree murder or, if provocation exists, 13 manslaughter. As noted by Justice Maupin, the new instructions indicate there is no 14 appreciable difference between premeditation and deliberation, except, perhaps, the 15 concept of the cooling off period. Because the definitions of deliberate and 16 premeditated are virtually indistinguishable in their everyday sense and in the new 17 instructions and a "design" to kill is always deliberate, the Byford Court concluded the 18 Kazalyn was not erroneous and did not implicate constitutional issues. This is why 19 the Nevada Supreme Court did not see any issue of retroactivity in Garner v. State, 20 116 Nev. 770, 6 P.3d 1013 (2000). The Court simply looked at the facts (bartender 21 found handcuffed with two gunshots to the head) and determined there was no issue 22 that the killing was deliberate and premeditated. Garner claimed he was not the 23 shooter, he drove a friend to the bar without knowing what his friend was up to and 24 the friend shot and killed the bartender.

25 The above review of case law demonstrates why the Nevada Supreme Court's 26 rulings are not an unreasonable interpretation of federal law and why AEDPA applied.
27 It also demonstrates why the Ninth Circuit's harmless error analysis is in error. The 28 Ninth Circuit relied on Byford's use of words like "coolness and reflection" but

1 ignored that this process can be instantaneous and the “passion” and “unconsidered 2 rash impulse” language. The Ninth Circuit redefined “deliberate” in a meaning 3 inconsistent with Nevada law. For these reasons, the Polk decision is bad law and 4 should not apply here.

5 II.

6 ANY ERROR IN THE INSTRUCTIONS ON PREMEDITATION AND 7 DELIBERATION IS HARMLESS BEYOND A REASONABLE DOUBT.

8 A defendant would not be entitled to relief for a Constitutional error unless that 9 defendant can show that “the error had a substantial and injurious effect or influence 10 in determining the jury’s verdict.” Polk, citing Brecht v. Abrahamson, 507 US 619, 11 637, 113 S.Ct. 1710 (1993) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); see also 12 Fry v. Pliler, 127 S.Ct. 2321 (2007); California v. Roy, 519 US 2, 117 S.Ct. 337 (1996).

13 Here, even if this Court were to find that Defendant was entitled to the revised 14 premeditation and deliberation jury instruction, Defendant’s conviction should 15 nevertheless be affirmed because the evidence in this case supports deliberation and 16 premeditation on Defendant’s part. In fact, this Court noted that the evidence 17 overwhelmingly demonstrated that Flanagan intended to kill or have one of his 18 cohorts<sup>4</sup> kill, both Carl and Colleen Gordon. Flanagan v. State, 104 Nev. at 107, 754
19 P.2d, 837 (1988). The evidence adduced at trial demonstrated that Flanagan, Moore 20 and others met before the killings to plan out how they would get into the Gordon 21 residence, how Carl and Colleen Gordon would be killed and by whom. Flanagan 22 would kill Colleen and the noise would lure Carl downstairs where he would be killed 23 by Moore. AA VI, 1238-47; 1375-81; AA VII, 1597-1601. Other witnesses testified 24 the Flanagan shot Colleen while Moore killed Carl as he came down the stairs to 25 investigate what was happening. AA VI, 1408-33; AA VII, 1619-29. Additional 26 testimony was presented that Flanagan admitted to committing, and aiding in 27

28 <sup>4</sup> In addition to Flanagan, the following individuals were involved in the plan: Randolph Moore, John Ray Luckett, Roy McDowell, Tom Akers and Michael Walsh.

1 commission of, the murders. AA VIII, 1754-57, 1772-79. Two of the weapons used 2 in the shootings were recovered from Lake Mead, where they had been dumped by 3 Moore and another accomplice. AA VII, 1632-33; AA VIII, 1945-49, 1956-67; AA 4 IX, 1968-73. Witnesses also identified a knife found at the scene as Flanagan's or 5 similar to one Flanagan carried and that he and another accomplice purchased a 6 duplicate knife after the murders to protect against allegations that the knife at the 7 scene belonged to him. AA VI, 1290-92, 1354-56; AA VII, 1480-85; AA VIII, 1721-8 28, 1750-53. Finally, Flanagan was scheduled to work on the day of the murders and 9 called to say he couldn't take his shift. AA VIII, 1738-41.

10 The evidence overwhelmingly supports the conclusion that Flanagan planned 11 the murder of Carl Gordon and had the specific intent to aid and abet Moore in that 12 murder.

13 Furthermore, under NRS 200.030(1)(b) first degree murder includes murder 14 which is "[c]ommitted in the perpetration or attempted perpetration of sexual assault, 15 kidnapping, arson, robbery, burglary, invasion of the home, sexual abuse of a child, 16 sexual molestation of a child under the age of 14 years or child abuse."

17 Here, Defendant was adjudged guilty of both burglary and robbery, felonies 18 which support the felony murder rule. As such, Defendant automatically possessed the 19 requisite mental intent necessary to be guilty of first degree murder. In other words, 20 the jury instructions on intent could not have altered the jury's judgment in this case 21 since they found defendant guilty of two felonies which support the felony murder 22 rule.

23 Similarly, in Bridges v. State, 116 Nev. 752, 6 P.3d 1000, 1008 (2000), the 24 defendant in that case argued that the jury was improperly instructed as to 25 premeditation and deliberation. This Court ruled that the defendant was not entitled to 26 relief on this issue because the Byford instruction was not retroactive, the evidence of 27 premeditation and deliberation was overwhelming, and the evidence of first degree 28 murder under a felony murder theory was overwhelming. This Court ruled that it was

1 appropriate to affirm the conviction as long as a valid independent basis existed to 2 uphold the jury's verdict. Id.

3 Here, the Defendant is not entitled to relief because the Byford instruction was 4 not a proper statement of the law at the time of the Defendant's trial and the evidence 5 supporting the Defendant's murder conviction under both the premeditation and 6 deliberation theory and felony murder theory was overwhelming.

7 Even though Polk v. Sandoval does not affect the instant appeal, this Court 8 should consider overruling or at least clarifying its decision in Byford. The issues 9 before the court today, most notably this case and Polk, are a result of Byford which 10 went too far in describing willful, premeditated and deliberate as separate elements of 11 what is in reality a single mens rea pertinent to 1st degree murder. To avoid further 12 confusion and unnecessary reversals by the federal courts, this Court should retreat 13 from its holding in Byford which has apparently led to unfortunate and unintended 14 interpretations by the federal courts.

15 CONCLUSION

16 WHEREFORE, the State submits that Polk does not provide relief for 17 Appellant on the facts of this case.
