I. STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

The issues before the Court in this appeal are:

1. Whether the district court properly denied discovery and an evidentiary hearing on the issues of actual innocence, prosecutorial misconduct, and ineffective assistance of counsel, among others, and denied relief on all claims

2. Whether the district court properly denied discovery and relief on the narrow issue of ineffective assistance of counsel arising out of a conflict between co-counsel for Petitioner during his third penalty hearing.

II. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Nature of the Case

Appellant Dale Edward Flanagan ("Flanagan") appeals the denial of his petition for a writ of habeas corpus regarding his convictions and death sentence for murders committed in November 1984. Following his conviction and direct appeals, Flanagan filed a petition, challenging the legality of his convictions and sentences. The District Court, Eighth Judicial District Judge Mark Gibbons, denied discovery on all issues, and denied an evidentiary hearing on all but a narrow portion of one of the 36 claims presented.

B. Procedural History

Flanagan was charged by Information with conspiracy to commit burglary, conspiracy to commit robbery, conspiracy to commit murder, burglary, robbery with the use of a deadly weapon and First Degree murder with the use of a deadly weapon (1 Appellant's Appendix 4, 19, 237 ("AA")). Trial began in September 1985, and on October 11, 1985, the jury convicted on all charges (12 AA 2756-62) and sentenced him to death on October 17, 1985 (13 AA 2967). On May 18, 1988, this Court affirmed Flanagan's convictions, but reversed his death sentence. Flanagan v. State (Flanagan I), 104 Nev. 105, 754 P.2d 836 (1988).

At the retrial, Flanagan was again sentenced to death (18 AA 4198). Although this Court affirmed Flanagan's sentence, Flanagan v. State (Flanagan II), 107 Nev. 243, 810 P.2d 759 (1991), the Supreme Court reversed the judgment. Flanagan v. Nevada (Flanagan III), 503 U.S.

1 931 (1992). On February 10, 1993, this Court remanded the case for a new penalty trial.
2 Flanagan v. State (Flanagan IV), 109 Nev. 50, 846 P.2d 1053 (1993). At the third penalty trial, 3 Flanagan was again sentenced to death. (25 AA 6000). On December 20, 1996, this Court 4 affirmed the judgment (25 AA 6040). Flanagan v. State (Flanagan V), 112 Nev. 1409, 930 P.2d 5 691 (1996), cert. denied, Flanagan v. Nevada (Flanagan VI), 523 U.S. 1083 (1998).

6 On May 28, 1998, Flanagan filed a Pro Per Petition for Post Conviction Relief and 7 requested appointment of counsel (26 AA 6323). On June 5, 1998, counsel was appointed, who 8 file a Supplemental Petition for Writ of Habeas Corpus on November 30, 1999 (26 AA 6345).

9 On August 16, 2000, the District Court denied Flanagan's Motion for Discovery (30 AA 10 7282), and on February 14, 2002, the Court held a limited evidentiary hearing (30 AA 7314). By 11 Order dated June 19, 2002, the Court denied the petition (31 AA 7521). On August 8, 2002, the 12 Court entered Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law and ordered the Petition denied (31 AA
13 7530). On August 16, 2002, the District Court mailed Notice of Entry of Decision and Order (31 14 AA 7564). Flanagan timely filed his Notice of Appeal on September 12, 2002 (31 AA 7568).

15 C. Statement of Relevant Facts

16 On November 5, 1984, Colleen and Carl Gordon, Flanagan's grandparents, were shot to 17 death in their Las Vegas home. Flanagan and five other teenage boys were charged with their 18 murders (1 AA 237). Flanagan was initially represented by the Clark County Public Defender, 19 but, shortly before the evidentiary hearing, that office developed a conflict (which is entirely 20 unexplained in the record) and was allowed to withdraw (2 AA 252, 254). Randall Pike, an 21 inexperienced attorney, was appointed to represent Flanagan just days before the evidentiary 22 hearing began (2 AA 257-60). Trial immediately followed that hearing. Flanagan was convicted 23 on all counts and the jury found no mitigating circumstances, despite Flanagan's youth and lack 24 of a prior criminal record (12 AA 2756-62; 13 AA 2983).

25 As explained above, this Court twice has reversed death sentences imposed on Flanagan 26 because of persistent prosecutorial misconduct. Despite the pervasiveness of the prosecution's 27 misconduct, this Court did not reverse the conviction (13 AA 3177).

1 The facts developed and presented in the post-conviction proceedings demonstrate that 2 Randall Pike was ineffective in every aspect of the case. For example, he conducted no 3 investigation of the underlying facts of the crime, hired no experts, in either the guilt or penalty 4 phase, allowed the court, without challenge, to impose an unusual and unfavorable regime for 5 making evidentiary objections and generally allowed the prosecution to ride roughshod over 6 Flanagan's rights, all of which resulted in his conviction and sentence (30 AA 7148, Pike Aff.).

7 Had Pike conducted even a minimal investigation, he would have found evidence of 8 Flanagan's actual innocence and would have presented a substantial case in mitigation that 9 almost certainly, given the predilection of the jurors, would have led to a sentence of less than 10 death. For example, in these habeas proceedings, Flanagan presented evidence that Robert 11 Ramirez, who was interviewed several times by the Las Vegas police, told the police that 12 Flanagan was actively trying to prevent the murders (30 AA 7186, Ramirez Dec. ¶13). Not only 13 was that evidence withheld from the defense (2 AA 266-11 AA 2707), but Randall Pike did not 14 discover it and, indeed, did not even look for it (30 AA 7148). Had he done so, the original jury 15 almost certainly would have had a reasonable doubt about Flanagan's guilt.

16 Moreover, despite evidence of Flanagan's mental illness during his incarceration leading 17 up to trial, and despite overwhelming evidence of his childhood abuse and neglect, his extreme 18 mistreatment at the hands of the victims of this crime, 34 AA [filed under seal] 8034, Holdman 19 Dec. ¶¶ 3, 5, 6; 34 AA 8061, Holdman Dec. ¶¶ 4, 5, 7, his heavy use of drugs and alcohol, 20 including his extreme intoxication on the date of the crime (30 AA 7207, Kriegler Dec. ¶¶ 21 17-21), Pike did no investigation and presented no defense at the guilt phase and only the most 22 minimal case in mitigation (12 AA 2763-13 AA 2966; 30 AA 7148). Similarly, counsel in the 23 subsequent trials failed to undertake adequate investigation and development of readily available 24 and compelling mitigation (30 AA 7204).

25 Despite this evidence, the court below denied every request for discovery (27 AA 6537; 26 30 AA 7282), and limited the scope of the evidentiary hearing, which lasted less than one day, to 27 one extremely narrow issue (30 AA 7282, 7293, 7310).

III. ARGUMENT

In the District Court, Flanagan presented 36 prima facie statutory and constitutional claims in the Supplemental Petition for Writ of Habeas Corpus (26 AA 6345-27 AA 6480). In addition to the detailed factual allegations contained in the Petition, Flanagan documented his entitlement to relief with 487 pages of exhibits accompanying the Petition and various motions (27 AA 6537-30 AA 7229). In response, the State generally denied the allegations in cursory fashion without explanation or factual support (27 AA 6488). Prior to and contemporaneously with the filing of the Reply to the State's response, Flanagan filed extensive requests for funding for investigation and experts and permission to conduct discovery to develop his entitlement to relief (34 AA [filed under seal]). In addition, Flanagan requested an evidentiary hearing on 19 of the 36 claims (30 AA 7230). Rather than permit the orderly and full development of the facts giving rise to his constitutional claims, the court truncated its review by summarily denying Flanagan's motions (30 AA 7282), conducting an unduly restrictive evidentiary hearing (30 AA 7326; 31 AA 7405; 30 AA 7312), and denying the Petition without permitting Flanagan the opportunity to prove his factual allegations (30 AA 7251; 7293, 7296, 7302-11; 7312). Under these circumstances – where the fact-finding and fair adjudicative process has been so distorted – a remand is necessary to permit adequate factual development of each claim.

First, the District Court improperly deprived Flanagan the funds necessary to investigate and present his claims for relief. As demonstrated in his funds requests, Flanagan required state-provided funds to hire investigators and experts to fully develop and present his claims (34 AA [filed under seal]). The District Court's rulings deprived Flanagan of the resources necessary to do so. Due process, equal protection, and the right to access to the courts guaranteed by the federal Constitution require a State to provide the funds necessary for an indigent petitioner to develop his claims and prepare for an evidentiary hearing.¹ This Court has recognized the need

1 of providing adequate assistance to indigent criminal defendants. See Pertgen v. State, 105 Nev.
2 282, 284, 774 P.2d 429 (1989) (approving trial court's authorization of "three psychiatrists to 3 assist [defendant] in determining the viability of the insanity defense in his case").

4 Second, the District Court improperly denied Flanagan's discovery requests (27 AA 5 6537; 30 AA 7282). A habeas petitioner is "entitled to careful consideration and plenary 6 processing of [his claims], including full opportunity for presentation of the relevant facts," 7 which includes "the benefit of compulsory process." Blackledge v. Allison, 431 U.S. 63, 82, 83, 8 n.26 (1977) (quoting Harris v. Nelson, 394 U.S. 286, 298 (1969)). Without discovery and the 9 opportunity thereafter to develop facts, petitioner cannot satisfy his obligation to "conduct a 10 reasonable and diligent investigation" and completely present his habeas claims. McCleskey v.
11 Zant, 499 U.S. 467, 494 (1991); see also Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 420 (2000) (failure by 12 State to provide discovery requires federal habeas court to authorize appropriate fact-finding).²

13 Nevada law similarly recognizes the importance of affording habeas petitioners 14 reasonable access to discovery. NRS 34.780 provides that "a party may invoke any method of 15 discovery available under the Nevada Rules of Civil Procedure if, and to the extent that, the 16 judge or justice for good cause shown grants leave to do so." This provision is virtually identical 17 to Rule 6 of the Rules Governing Section 2254 Cases in the U.S. District Courts. To effectuate 18 petitioners' right to fair adjudication of their claims, the Supreme Court has recognized that 19 courts have the "duty . . . to provide the necessary facilities and procedures for an adequate 20 inquiry" into any potentially viable claims raised by a habeas corpus petition, and into any claim 21 that gives "reason to believe . . . [it] may, if the facts are fully developed . . . demonstrate that 22 [the petitioner] is confined illegally." Harris, 394 U.S. at 300; see also Brown v. Vasquez, 952 23 F.2d 1164, 1167 (9th Cir. 1991). Using the "good cause" standard, federal courts routinely have 24 n. 3 (9th Cir. 1990) ("If the fairness of our system is to be assured, indigent defendants must 25 have access to minimal defense aids to offset the advantage presented by the vast prosecutorial 26 and investigative resources available to the Government."); cf. 21 U.S.C. § 848(q)(4)(B) (federal petitioners challenging state death sentences are entitled to "reasonably necessary services").

27 ² For example, although ordered to make its file available for inspection, 31 AA 7578, the State disclosed no police reports or any other investigative materials (33 AA 7827, Newell Aff.).

1 permitted the discovery sought here. See, e.g., Coleman v. Zant, 708 F.2d 541, 547 (11th Cir.
2 1986); Warden v. Gall, 865 F.2d 786, 787-88 (6th Cir. 1989).

3 Without permitting discovery, the District Court's summary adjudication of Flanagan's 4 claims was erroneous. See, e.g., Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 250 n.5 (1986)
5 (noting that Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(f) provides "that summary judgment [is to] be 6 refused where the nonmoving party has not had the opportunity to discover information that is 7 essential to his opposition"); Klinge v. Eikenberry, 849 F.2d 409, 413 (9th Cir. 1988) ("It was, 8 therefore, an abuse of discretion for the district court to grant summary judgment before 9 permitting discovery"). Indeed, well-established rules preclude premature adjudication of 10 summary judgment motions in federal courts when discovery is necessary for the opposition.
11 Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(f); Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 326 (1986) (permitting discovery 12 prevents non-moving party from being "railroaded" by premature summary judgment motions).
13 Third, the District Court improperly dismissed 19 claims without conducting an evidentiary 14 hearing (30 AA 7282). Summary dismissal was inappropriate because the State failed to prove 15 that the evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to Flanagan, established no genuine issue as 16 to any material fact, and that the State was entitled to judgment as a matter of law in light of the 17 undisputed facts. See Anderson, 477 U.S. at 255 (court must view pleadings and other material 18 presented in the light most favorable to petitioner and give him the benefit of all reasonable 19 inferences to be drawn from the facts); Marshall v. State, 110 Nev. 1328, 885 P.2d 603, 606 20 (1994) ("When a petition for post-conviction relief raises claims supported by specific factual 21 allegations which, if true, would entitle the petitioner to relief, the petitioner is entitled to an 22 evidentiary hearing unless those claims are repelled by the record."). To meet this burden, the 23 State was required to establish a right to judgment with such clarity as to leave no room for 24 controversy, and to show that Flanagan was not entitled to prevail under any discernable 25 circumstances. See Mann v. State, 118 Nev. 351, 46 P.3d 1228, 1229 (2002) (State failed to 26 establish that petitioner's claim was "belied by the record" and thus the failure to hold a hearing 27 was error). As this Court recognized in Mann, it is insufficient for the State to proffer a differing

1 version of the facts to avoid an evidentiary hearing: "A claim is not "belied by the record"
2 because a factual dispute is created by the pleadings or affidavits filed during the post-conviction
3 proceedings. A claim is "belied" when it is contradicted or proven to be false by the record as it
4 existed at the time the claim was made." Mann, 46 P.3d at 1230.³

5 Finally, the District Court abdicated its responsibility as an impartial and fair decision-maker by 6 adopting verbatim the State's proposed Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law (31 AA 7530-7 60). These "findings" were not made following the full presentation of facts necessary to resolve 8 the 36 claims. Rather, they consisted entirely of the State's distorted and unsupported 9 allegations. Procedural due process, guaranteed by the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments, 10 demands that adjudicative proceedings be conducted with "fundamental fairness." Watson v.
11 Patterson, 358 F.2d 297, 298 (10th Cir. 1966). Due process includes the right to have a court 12 independently weigh the evidence.⁴ Appellate courts consistently have examined lower courts' 13 findings and the process used to arrive at those facts to determine whether a court satisfied its 14 role as fact finder consistent with due process.⁵ Furthermore, appellate courts refuse to apply a 15 deferential standard when the lower court merely adopted the prevailing party's findings, and 16 instead review them under a "greater scrutiny" standard.⁶ By failing to arrive at its own factual

18 823, 59 P.3d 1192, 1197 (2002) (where record fails to provide need facts "an evidentiary hearing on this issue is therefore necessary").

19 ⁴ See, e.g., Beck v. Quiktrip Corp., 708 F.2d 532, 536 (10th Cir. 1983) (analyzing whether "all whether the trial was conducted with "fundamental fairness" under the Due Process clause); (evaluating whether court properly weighed the facts and concluding that "where we are left with 22 the certain conviction, or more often an abiding impression, that a party was not afforded a fair and adequate opportunity to present his cause, we do not hesitate to reverse").

23 ⁵ See, e.g., Anderson v. City of Bessemer City, North Carolina, 470 U.S. 564, 572-73 (1985) (lower court did not "uncritically accept [] findings prepared without judicial guidance by the 24 prevailing party" because the findings of the court "vary considerably in organization and content from those submitted by petitioner's counsel"); L.K. Comstock & Co. v. United Eng. & 25 Constructors, Inc., 880 F.2d 219, 222 (9th Cir. 1989) (applying "careful scrutiny" and finding that because the district court's conclusions deviated from those of the prevailing party, the trial 26 court "did not 'uncritically accept' [its] proposals") (citation omitted).

27 ⁶ See, e.g., In Re Alcock v. Small Business Administration, 50 F.3d 1456, 1459 n.2 (9th Cir.
1995) ("Findings of fact prepared by counsel and adopted by the trial court are subject to greater scrutiny than those authored by the trial judge."); L.K. Comstock & Co., 880 F.2d at 222 ("When

1 findings, the court below neither independently weighed the factual issues nor determined the 2 findings. Rather, it copied verbatim the State's findings of fact, most of them on matters for 3 which no hearing was held. Given the court's abdication of its fact-finding role, the remedy is 4 for this Court to remand for proper resolution of the disputed facts. See, e.g., In re Marriage of 5 Jovel, 49 Cal.App.4th 575, 589 (1996) (remand necessary where finding was insufficient and 6 "provides an inadequate basis for reviewing the exercise of the trial court's discretion").

7 Claim 1

8 Without permitting discovery or conducting an evidentiary hearing, the District Court 9 improperly denied Flanagan's claim that the prosecutors in each trial engaged in pervasive and 10 egregious misconduct and systematically engaged in campaigns to deprive Flanagan of any 11 semblance of a fair trial or reliable guilt and penalty determinations. Mr. Seaton and Mr.
12 Harmon, who, throughout their careers, have displayed a callous disregard for a fair judicial 13 process and have engaged in innumerable instances of misconduct, orchestrated the State's case 14 and witness testimony that tainted each of the three trials. The misconduct included witness 15 intimidation, coerced and false testimony influenced by promises of cash payments or other 16 benefits, withholding of critical, material information, and government overreaching that 17 deprived Flanagan of his constitutional rights during each trial. Indeed, the prosecutors' 18 pervasive and egregious misconduct during the three trials resulted in convictions and sentences 19 based not on a dispassionate and fair application of the law, but rather on false testimony, 20 religious fervor, bias, misinformation, non-record information, and improper and erroneous legal 21 standards, all in violation of Flanagan's First, Fifth, Sixth, Eighth, and Fourteenth Amendments 22 rights to freedom of speech, rights to association, separation of church and state, a fair, reliable, 23 and rational determination of guilt and individualized determination of penalty. Flanagan did not 24 have a jury that considered and weighed only materially accurate, non-prejudicial, relevant 25 evidence of which Flanagan had notice and a fair opportunity to refute, nor did it give full effect

27 the district court's conclusions are adopted from the prevailing party's suggestions, ... the appellate court is to engage in 'careful scrutiny'").

1 to all evidence in mitigation of penalty, to the privilege against self-incrimination, to the 2 effective assistance of counsel, due process, or equal protection.

3 A. Flanagan's convictions were obtained with pervasive prosecutorial 4 misconduct.

5 Seaton's pattern of prosecutorial misconduct is all too familiar to this Court: He has a 6 "history of persistent disregard for established rules of professional conduct regarding improper 7 argument before the jury," Howard v. State, 106 Nev. 713, 722 n.1, 800 P.2d 175 (1990) (citing 8 seven other cases involving egregious and unprofessional action.). Similarly, the Court has 9 found that Harmon has engaged in misconduct and flouts his professional and constitutional 10 obligations. See, e.g., Jimenez v. State, 112 Nev. 610, 918 P.2d 687 (1996); D'Agostino v. State, 11 112 Nev. 417, 915 P.2d 264 (1996). Rather than reform their conduct, Seaton and Harmon have 12 publicly joked about which of them holds the record for prosecutorial misconduct (30 AA 7148, 13 Pike Aff. ¶4). Indeed, the numerous instances of prosecutorial misconduct in this case 14 demonstrate that Seaton and Harmon have disregarded this Court's warnings. Their misconduct 15 includes witness intimidation, the presentation of coerced and false testimony, government over-16 reaching, withholding of exculpatory information, and repeated instances of improper attempts to 17 distort Flanagan's right to a fair trial. See Claim 1.B.-F, Claim 2, Claim 3.⁷

18 The U.S. Constitution requires that prosecutors refrain from improper methods calculated 19 to produce a wrongful conviction. See U.S. v. Young, 470 U.S. 1, 7 (1985); Viereck v. U.S., 318 20 U.S. 236, 248 (1942). The Supreme Court has recognized that the prosecutor's duty is to ensure 21 "that justice shall be done." Viereck, 318 U.S. at 248; see also Darden v. Wainwright, 477 U.S.
22 168 (1986); Ross v. State, 106 Nev. 924, 928, 803 P.2d 1104 (1990). Flanagan is entitled to a 23 new trial in light of the egregious and cumulative effects of misconduct, and because this Court

24
25 ⁷ The continued pattern of recidivism by these prosecutors provides a firm basis to infer that 26 their misconduct is intentional, or at least knowing, and to treat that conduct more severely.
27 Moreover, recidivist prosecutors underscore that past and current sanctions are not adequate to prevent future misconduct. Indeed, this Court previously has sanctioned prosecutors who engaged in repeated misconduct despite previous warnings, including Mr. Seaton. See Howard, 106 Nev. at 722-23; McGuire v. State, 100 Nev. 153, 154-55, 677 P.2d 1060 (1984).

1 cannot state “without reservation that the verdict would have been the same in the absence of 2 error.” Ross, 106 Nev. at 928; Witherow v. State, 104 Nev. 721, 724, 765 P.2d 1153 (1988).

3 Despite the presentation of numerous affidavits supporting this claim (30 AA 7135-99, 4 7202-29), the court below refused repeated requests for discovery and the opportunity to prove 5 these allegations at an evidentiary hearing (27 AA 6537; 30 AA 7282; 30 AA 7293; 30 AA
6 7310). Instead, the court, at the urging of the State, incorrectly assumed that this Court
7 previously addressed this claim in Flanagan I, and that it was thus barred by the law of the case 8 (31 AA 7532 ¶17; 31 AA 7538 ¶15). In Flanagan I, this Court addressed whether – based solely 9 on the appellate record – the prosecutor’s conduct during the presentation of evidence and 10 argument during the guilt trial warranted reversal. 104 Nev. at 107. The Court was neither 11 presented with, nor purported to resolve, the pervasive prosecutorial misconduct presented here.

12 The “law of the case” doctrine does not bar a petitioner’s claim that was not previously 13 presented or, if so, is supported by new facts. See, e.g., Clem v. State, 81 P.3d 521, 525 (2003) 14 (law of the case doctrine applies to “subsequent appeals in which the facts are substantially the 15 same”). As amply demonstrated by the Petition and exhibits, the court was required to consider 16 Flanagan’s claim of pervasive prosecutorial misconduct because it relied upon particularized 17 claims and facts not before this Court during the previous proceedings.⁸

18 The court also characterized the allegation that the State unlawfully induced witnesses to 19 testify and shaped their testimony through offers of leniency as a “naked” allegation (31 AA 20 7533 ¶18). The court was in error, as the record is replete with instances of such misconduct.
21 These instances of prosecutorial misconduct violated Flanagan’s constitutional rights to a fair 22 trial, and the court erred in resolving this issue without affording discovery and an evidentiary 23 hearing to develop fully the facts in support of the claim. Under these circumstances, a remand 24 is necessary to ensure resolution of this claim after full and fair fact-finding.

25 B. The State manufactured critical and false testimony against Flanagan by 26 ⁸ Moreover, as demonstrated by the exhibits filed below, the State’s misconduct in securing 27 Flanagan’s convictions and sentence amounts to outrageous government conduct requiring reconsideration of any prior decisions to prevent a “manifest injustice.” Clem, 81 P.3d at 525.

1 intimidating and bribing witnesses.

2 From the moment that the crimes were discovered, law enforcement officials engaged in 3 a campaign of witness intimidation and coercion to create a case against Flanagan and his co-4 defendants. Several witnesses were threatened with prosecution if they did not cooperate with 5 law enforcement and were coerced into testifying. John Lucas, a critical prosecution witness, 6 was threatened with prosecution if he did not cooperate (30 AA 7138, Lucas Dec. ¶6). Rusty 7 Havens recounts the fear that he experienced when police questioned him, despite his having 8 been in custody at the time of the crimes (30 AA 7145, Havens Dec. ¶8). Similarly, police 9 threatened Wayne Wittig with “charges of contempt and withholding information” and confined 10 his “answers to their version of the crime.” (30 AA 7170, Wittig Dec. ¶¶32, 34).

11 Law enforcement improperly elicited incriminating statements and physical evidence 12 from Flanagan by employing Saldana as a police agent, who had had sexual relations with Las 13 Vegas Metropolitan Police Department officers (8 AA 1794-99; 30 AA 7168, Samples-Smith 14 Dec. ¶¶10, 11; 30 AA 7194, Saldana-Ficklin Dec. ¶¶5, 8, 9, 10). To obtain information for law 15 enforcement, Saldana engaged in sexual relations and began living with Flanagan (8 AA 1819).
16 In exchange for her assistance as a police agent, Saldana was not prosecuted for prostitution and 17 other crimes (30 AA 7191, Thayer Dec. ¶¶9, 10; 30 AA 7168, Samples-Smith Dec. ¶¶2, 11).
18 Neither Saldana’s status nor the benefits she received were disclosed to the defense.

19 Similarly, the prosecution improperly and unconstitutionally induced the testimony of 20 critical prosecution witnesses, including Lucas, Havens, and Saldana, with promises of cash 21 payments, immunity from prosecution, and other benefits (30 AA 7138, Lucas Dec. ¶¶6, 11, 12; 22 30 AA 7194, Saldana-Ficklin Dec. ¶5; 7 AA 1708; 8 AA 1848; 30 AA 7158, McDowell Dec.
23 ¶10; 30 AA 7145, Havens Dec. ¶¶8, 9). The prosecution then coached and influenced the 24 testimony of numerous witnesses, encouraged witnesses to shape their testimony to conform 25 with others’ accounts, and instructed witnesses not to reveal exculpatory or impeachment 26 evidence to the defense (30 AA 7138, Lucas Dec. ¶¶8, 9; 30 AA 7145, Havens Dec. ¶¶8, 9; 30
27 AA 7170, Wittig Dec. ¶40; 30 AA 7158, McDowell Dec. ¶14; 30 AA 7191, Thayer Dec. ¶11; 7

1 AA 1679). Thus, the State improperly and unconstitutionally presented false testimony
2 regarding the “planning” of the crime, including false evidence that Flanagan discussed killing 3 his grandparents to obtain an inheritance (8 AA 1756-57; 30 AA 7194, Saldana-Ficklin Dec. ¶2; 4 30 AA 7138, Lucas Dec. ¶23; 30 AA 7170, Wittig Dec. ¶36).

5 These coercive law enforcement tactics rendered the witnesses’ testimony fundamentally 6 unfair and unreliable and deprived Flanagan of his constitutional rights to due process and the 7 right to present a defense. See, e.g., Wilcox v. Ford, 813 F.2d 1140 (11th Cir. 1987); People v.
8 Douglas, 50 Cal.3d 468, 268 Cal. Rptr. 126 (1990). Moreover, the prosecution’s knowing use of 9 this material, false evidence violated Flanagan’s Fourteenth Amendment right to due process.
10 See Giglio v. U.S., 405 U.S. 150, 153 (1972) (“deception of a court and jurors by the 11 presentation of known false evidence is incompatible with ‘rudimentary demands of justice’”).
12 This same rationale applies even when the State, although not soliciting false evidence, does not 13 correct false or misleading evidence. See Napue v. Illinois, 360 U.S. 264, 2269 (1959); see also 14 Tejada v. Dugger, 941 F.2d 1551, 1556 (11th Cir. 1991). A new trial is required if the false 15 testimony could “in any reasonable likelihood have affected the judgment of the jury.” Giglio, 16 405 U.S. at 154. But the “reasonable likelihood” standard for a new trial does not require that 17 Flanagan demonstrate that the outcome would in fact have been different. See Kyles v. Whitley, 18 514 U.S. 419, 434 (1995).⁹ The need for heightened reliability in capital proceedings, which are 19 protected by due process and the Eighth Amendment mandates reversal of a conviction and death 20 sentence obtained on the basis of false and unreliable evidence.¹⁰

21 ⁹ Even good faith presentations of false or misleading evidence will not immunize the 22 government from a due process violation. U.S. v. Young, 17 F.3d 1201 (9th Cir. 1994). This 23 Court has further held that, regardless of the prosecution’s knowledge or conduct, if a conviction 24 is based upon materially false evidence, the truth-seeking function of the trial is corrupted, and 25 due process is denied under both the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution and Article 26 6 § 4 of the Nevada Constitution. See Riley v. State, 93 Nev. 461, 462, 567 P.2d 475 (1977).

27 ¹⁰ See Simmons v. South Carolina, 512 U.S. 154 (1994) (due process requires defendant be permitted to inform jury of parole ineligibility to correct misleading prosecutor argument that he will present a danger if not sentenced to death); Johnson v. Mississippi, 486 U.S. 578 (1988) (Eighth Amendment requires reversal of death sentence based in part on felony conviction subsequently set aside); Caldwell v. Mississippi, 472 U.S. 320 (1985) (Eighth Amendment violated where jury given inaccurate information regarding availability of appellate review of decision to impose a death sentence); Gardner v. Florida, 430 U.S. 349 (1977) (due process

1 Similarly, Saldana's role as a police agent and the benefits she received were not 2 disclosed to the defense (30 AA 7194). The failure of the prosecution to disclose these facts 3 violated Flanagan's statutory and constitutional rights.¹¹ Had her status and the benefits been 4 disclosed, Saldana's testimony would have been excluded, or, if admitted, would have been 5 thoroughly discredited.

6 C. The State failed to disclose exculpatory evidence, and instructed witnesses
7 not to disclose exculpatory evidence to the defense or to the Court.

8 The federal Constitution has required prosecutors to disclose all evidence favorable to the 9 defendant that is material either to guilt or punishment. See Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 86-10 87 (1963) (prosecution's failure to disclose material evidence favorable to defendant violates due 11 process); Carriger v. Stewart, 132 F.3d 463 (9th Cir. 1997) (prosecution obligated by due process 12 to disclose material exculpatory evidence on its own motion, without request). In determining 13 whether certain evidence is material, the reviewing court must take into consideration the 14 cumulative effect of the evidence suppressed by the prosecution. Kyles, 514 U.S. at 436-37.
15 The evidence is material when the result of the proceeding would have been different had the 16 prosecutor disclosed the evidence to the defense. Id. at 434-35.

17 Flanagan conclusively has demonstrated that the State failed to disclose relevant, 18 material, and exculpatory evidence. During its investigation and prosecution, State officials 19 interviewed numerous individuals who provided critical information contrary to the State's 20 theory. In each instance, law enforcement unconstitutionally withheld such material information.
21 For example, John Lucas's statement that the killings were not planned was never disclosed to 22 Flanagan (30 AA 7138, Lucas Dec. ¶23). The State similarly did not disclose the statements of

24 violated where death sentence is based in part upon false information contained in probation report that defendant had no opportunity to rebut).

25 ¹¹ See, e.g., Kyles, 514 U.S. at 433 (due process requires prosecutor to disclose any material, 26 exculpatory evidence); Brewer v. Williams, 430 U.S. 387, 399 (1977) (Sixth Amendment right to 27 counsel prohibits statements deliberately elicited from the defendant by the government or its agent in the absence of counsel after adversarial proceedings have been initiated); Massiah v.
U.S., 377 U.S. 201 (1964) (deliberate elicitation of statements by government agents after adversarial proceedings have been initiated violates the Sixth Amendment).

1 Robert Ramirez, whom law enforcement interviewed numerous times and who provided 2 evidence of Flanagan's actual innocence (30 AA 7186, Ramirez Dec. ¶19). Like Ramirez, a 3 number of other witnesses described to law enforcement Flanagan's good character, his inability 4 to harm anyone, and his domination by others (30 AA 7170, Wittig Dec. ¶¶34, 35, 36; 30 AA 5 7138, Lucas Dec. ¶23). The prosecution, nonetheless, repeatedly portrayed Flanagan as the 6 ringleader of the conspiracy (5 AA 1176-93; 11 AA 2491-2560, 2676-2706; 12 AA 2882, 2936).

7 Other violations include the numerous instances in which the prosecution shaped the 8 testimony of critical prosecution witnesses and concealed information favorable to Flanagan (see 9 Claim 1.A. supra). The prosecution did not disclose the existence of Flanagan's will until the 10 first penalty phase, thus precluding the defense from preparing for its use (12 AA 2855). In 11 addition, the prosecution did not reveal to Flanagan's counsel, nor did Flanagan independently 12 understand the significance of the fact that he met over a period of several days with agents of 13 the State from an agency called PROBE to assist in a program designed to discourage youth from 14 participation in witchcraft (30 AA 7148, Pike Aff. ¶5). Such evidence would have been highly 15 material at Flanagan's sentencing hearing. Instead of revealing this information to defense 16 counsel, the State portrayed Flanagan as a black-hearted devil worshipper, intent on murder and 17 theft (11 AA 2492; 12 AA 2927; 30 AA 7148, Pike Aff. ¶13).

18 All of the withheld evidence would have been favorable to Flanagan's defense, both 19 individually and cumulatively. The withholding of this material exculpatory and impeachment 20 evidence invalidates Flanagan's judgment of conviction and sentence because the jury's verdicts 21 were based on incomplete and false information. Had the information withheld by the 22 prosecution been revealed, defense counsel could have used it to cast serious doubt on the 23 prosecution's case, cross examine prosecution witnesses, and secure a more favorable result for 24 Flanagan. There is a reasonable probability, sufficient to undermine the confidence in the 25 outcome, that had this evidence been disclosed, the result would have been different. The 26 suppression of this crucial evidence substantially and injuriously affected the process and 27 rendered the convictions and sentence fundamentally unfair and unconstitutional.

1 Without permitting discovery (30 AA 7282), as expressly requested by Flanagan (27 AA 2 6537), the court below found that the State's misconduct did not constitute a Brady violation in 3 part because Flanagan was aware of some withheld exculpatory evidence (31 AA 7530 at 7535, 4 ¶24; at 7538, ¶16). The court's order was erroneous for two reasons. First, the court was wrong 5 on the law. There is no "defendant knowledge" exception to a prosecutor's obligation under 6 Brady.¹² Second, the court was wrong on the facts, since the State withheld material exculpatory
7 evidence unknown to Flanagan. At the very least, the court erred in reaching its conclusion 8 without allowing discovery and conducting an evidentiary hearing. Mann, 46 P.3d at 1230.

9 D. The prosecution's misconduct included the misuse of peremptory challenges.

10 During jury selection, the prosecution utilized its peremptory challenges in an intentionally 11 gender-discriminatory manner by excluding all but one woman from the jury panel.¹³ Such use 12 of peremptory challenges violated Flanagan's federal constitutional right to equal protection and 13 mandatory state law rights to a jury drawn from a representative cross-section of the community.
14 See, e.g., J.E.B. v. Alabama, 511 U.S. 127 (1994).¹⁴

15 E. Numerous other instances of prosecutorial misconduct deprived Flanagan of

18 ¹² See, e.g., Belmontes v. Woodford, 350 F.3d 861, 881-82 (9th Cir. 2003) (prosecutor has duty 19 to correct false testimony regardless of defense knowledge); Benn v. Lambert, 283 F.3d 1040, 20 1061 (9th Cir. 2002) (defense knowledge does not dispose of prosecutor's Brady obligations to disclose expert impeachment); Banks v. Reynolds, 54 F.3d 1508, 1517 (10th Cir. 1995) (prosecution's obligation to disclose Brady evidence independent of defendant's knowledge).

21 ¹³ Three of the peremptory challenges utilized by the prosecution were used to exclude Laura J.
Jacobs (15 AA 3612), Joleen J. Melton (15 AA 3655), and Alverta N. Colonna (15 AA 3672).

22 ¹⁴ The District Court held that this claim was moot because Flanagan received a third penalty 23 hearing (31 AA 7530 at 7534 ¶20). The court's conclusion, however, is erroneous. Where, as 24 here, pervasive government misconduct has required Flanagan to undergo three capital 25 prosecutions, during which the prosecution has tailored its case with greater precision to address 26 the defense, fundamental fairness requires this Court to impose a life sentence without a retrial.
27 See, e.g., Oregon v. Kennedy, 456 U.S. 667 (1982) ("retrial is barred where the error that prompted the mistrial is intended to provoke a mistrial or is 'motivated by bad faith or undertaken to harass or prejudice' the defendant"); Green v. U.S., 355 U.S. 184, 187-88 (1957) ("the State with all its resources and power should not be allowed to make repeated attempts to convict an individual for an alleged offense, thereby subjecting him to embarrassment, expense and ordeal and compelling him to live in a continuing state of anxiety and insecurity, as well as enhancing the possibility that even though innocent he may be found guilty").

Prosecutors Seaton and Harmon committed numerous other acts of prosecutorial misconduct that violated Flanagan's constitutional right to a fair trial. For example, during voir dire, Seaton admitted that he had run a "police scope" on prospective juror Youngberg, without disclosing the results with defense counsel, contrary to his prior agreement with them. Seaton explained his action as follows: "And simply out of curiosity I did run that one name. Didn't tell defense counsel because I knew it was really a waste of time because he was one of our first peremptories." (5 AA 1138). The prosecution's improper and unlawful use of law enforcement resources to investigate the backgrounds of potential jurors, and the prosecution's failure to inform Flanagan of that action, distorted the adversarial process and deprived Flanagan of his constitutional rights. See, e.g., Banks v. Dretke, 124 S.Ct. 1256, 1275 (2004).

1. Injection of irrelevant and prejudicial information.

At every turn, the prosecution sought to inflame the jury's passions with irrelevant and prejudicial information, inject personal evaluations of the case, and deprive Flanagan of a fair guilt determination.¹⁵ The record is replete with such misconduct. For example, in an obvious attempt to condemn all four defendants because of their associations, Harmon argued during the guilt phase: "Four men charged with these crimes. Four men who had as their friends gang members. These people were school dropouts. They were drug users. They were devil worshippers." (11 AA 2492). None of those characteristics are criminal, yet they were used by the prosecution to portray Flanagan as evil and therefore worthy of condemnation. He later referred to Flanagan's "devil worshipping buddies." (11 AA 2501). Seaton also commented on Flanagan's motive and speculated that he intended to "divvy it up [the estate] in the middle of a coven proceeding or something." (11 AA 2511). He discussed Flanagan's role in the conspiracy, saying "they didn't only lead the coven, they let their black and their white magic spill over into this conspiracy and it was they who did all of the planning of the things that we have talked

1 about before.” (11 AA 2519). And again, “These people were one and the same. They were 2 buddies and partners as well as conspirators. And they did everything together. They shared 3 drugs, they partied, they shared beer, they shared witchcraft.” (11 AA 2549). All of these 4 comments were made by the State during closing argument in the guilt phase.

5 Seaton and Harmon also injected their personal opinions (see, e.g., 11 AA 2523, 2525, 6 2546), in violation of state and federal law and ethical rules. U.S. v. Necoechea, 986 F.2d 1273, 7 1278 (9th Cir. 1993) (vouching violated due process and requires reversal). Further, Seaton
8 argued evidence that was not in the record (11 AA 2533).¹⁶

9 Harmon made blatant attempts to appeal to the passion and prejudice of the jury by 10 emphasizing the evil of the defendants and the benevolence (kindly grandparents) of the victims 11 (11 AA 2492, 2501, 2511, 2518, 2549, 2677, 2684; 12 AA 2876, 2882). See, e.g., Cunningham 12 v. Zant, 928 F.2d 1006, 1019-1202 (11th Cir. 1991) (Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments prohibit 13 prosecutor from appealing “to the jury that is directed to passion or prejudice rather than to 14 reason and to an understanding of the law”); Thomas, 83 P.3d at 826 (prosecutor argument to 15 treat the defendant mercilessly improper). Harmon similarly violated Flanagan’s right to a fair 16 trial by calling on the authority of his office and his experience in attempting to sway the jury 17 with his personal opinion that “I can’t think of a case which more clearly establishes that it was 18 First Degree murder, because of the felony murder rule and also because of the clear plan and 19 design to murder two human beings.” (11 AA 2698-99).

20 2. Comments on Flanagan’s right to remain silent.

21 The prosecutor intentionally, improperly, and prejudicially penalized Flanagan for 22 exercising his right to remain silent by commenting on his failure to testify during the guilt 23 phase. The prosecutor argued, “[a]nd the last point to be made about whether or not conspiracies

25 ¹⁶ See, e.g., Thomas v. State, 120 Nev. 37, 83 P.3d 818, 825-26 (2004) (prosecutor may not refer 26 to facts not in the record); Thomas v. Hubbard, 273 F.3d 1164, 1175-76 (9th Cir. 2001) (due 27 process violated where prosecutor introduced inadmissible evidence); Gomez v. Ahitow, 29 F.3d 1128, 1136 (9th Cir. 1994) (“The prosecutor may not, consistent with a defendant’s Due Process rights and Sixth Amendment right to confrontation, ‘seek to obtain a conviction by going beyond the evidence before the jury.’”).

1 occurred is that the conspiracies, the agreements, the meetings go uncontradicted. No one has 2 taken the stand in this case that I remember, no one has taken the stand and said, 'wait a minute.
3 Those people are lying. Those meetings didn't take place.'" (11 AA 2513-14). Judge Mosley, 4 without justification or even explanation, ignored the violation when it was called to his attention
5 (11 AA 2514). This per se violation of the Constitution mandates relief.¹⁷

6 3. Reliance on biblical dogma.

7 The prosecutor intentionally misled the jury to convict and impose a death sentence based 8 on capricious considerations of biblical dogma and pedantic exploitation of divine law, thereby 9 interjecting unconstitutionally impermissible factors into the sentencing decision. Specifically, 10 Harmon invoked the Bible in exhorting the jury to condemn Flanagan during the guilt trial (11 11 AA 2703). The prosecutor's biblical arguments were calculated to exploit the emotions and 12 scruples of jurors schooled in the Christian religion to disregard their duty to weigh the evidence 13 before them and render a fair and impartial decision.

14 The prosecutor's reliance on biblical law and invocation of the word of God to argue that the 15 jury was required to convict and impose a death sentence conflicts with case law requiring that 16 verdicts be based solely upon the evidence and the relevant law. See, e.g., Chandler v. Florida, 17 449 U.S. 560, 574 (1981) ("[t]rial courts must be especially vigilant to guard against any 18 impairment of the defendant's right to a verdict based solely upon the evidence and the relevant 19 law"). Reliance on religious dogma is completely inappropriate in capital cases, given the 20 normative decision to be made. See Jones v. Kemp, 706 F. Supp. 1534, 1559-60 (1989). A 21 prosecutor's reliance on biblical law also lessens the jury's decision-making burden by shifting 22 responsibility for their decision from the jury to God. See Sawyer v. Smith, 497 U.S. 227, 244
23 (1990). Because of these constitutional issues raised by arguments based in biblical dogma,

25 ¹⁷ See, e.g., Wainwright v. Greenfield, 474 U.S. 284, 291 (1986) (Fifth Amendment recognizes 26 "the fundamental unfairness of implicitly assuring a suspect that his silence will not be used 27 against him and then using his silence to impeach an explanation subsequently offered at trial"); U.S. v. Schuler, 813 F.2d 978, 981 (9th Cir. 1986) (prosecutor's comments on non-testifying defendant's courtroom demeanor violated Fifth Amendment right not to testify and not to be convicted except upon the basis of evidence introduced at trial).

1 virtually every federal and state court to consider religious arguments has condemned them.¹⁸

2 These longstanding principles recently were applied in Sandoval v. Calderon, 241 F.3d
3 765 (9th Cir. 2000), in which the Ninth Circuit concluded that the petitioner “was denied a fair 4 penalty phase trial by the prosecutor’s closing argument that invoked divine authority and 5 paraphrased a well known biblical passage as support for imposition of the death penalty.” Id. at 6 769. In this case, because the prosecutor’s use of religious authority formed the basis, 7 framework, and authority for his entire argument that Flanagan was guilty, the egregious 8 misconduct necessarily prejudiced Flanagan. The prosecutor delivered no less than a religious 9 sermon, urging the jury to make its decision based on religious fervor and obedience to the word 10 of God as delivered by the prosecutor, thus violating the principle that a prosecutor’s comments 11 must not be “directed to passion and prejudice rather than to an understanding of the facts and 12 of the law.” Lesko v. Lehman, 925 F.2d 1527, 1545 (3rd Cir. 1991) (quoting U.S. ex rel. Perry 13 v. Mulligan, 544 F.2d 674, 680 (3rd Cir. 1976)).

14 The District Court’s failure to address this issue in its Order denying the habeas petition 15 was erroneous (31 AA 7530). The prosecutor’s exhortation to the jury based on religious 16 grounds violated Flanagan’s constitutional rights and requires relief.

17 F. The trial court failed to exercise its authority to control the prosecutorial 18 misconduct in this case.

19 Intentional wrongdoing by critical members of the State’s law enforcement team – the 20 prosecutors – calls into question the fairness and integrity of the trial and demands effective 21 judicial supervisory action to prevent or deter such behavior. The power to take such action was 22 within the trial court’s discretion. Indeed, this Court has explicitly held that not only do 23 prosecutors have a duty to insure that the defendant receives a fair trial, but also “our District 24 Courts have a duty to insure that every accused shall receive a fair trial. This duty requires that

2 sponte.” Collier v. State, 101 Nev. 473, 477, 705 P.2d 1126, 1128 (1985). Despite the 3 prosecutors’ repeated and intentional misconduct, the trial court failed to undertake any steps to 4 protect Flanagan’s statutory and constitutional rights.¹⁹

5 The resulting deprivations of Flanagan’s fundamental federal constitutional rights was 6 prejudicial, had a substantial and injurious effect or influence on the jury’s determination of the 7 verdicts at the guilt and penalty phases, and require the granting of habeas corpus relief from the 8 convictions and sentence of death.

9 Claim 2

10 Flanagan’s conviction and death sentence are invalid under state and federal 11 constitutional guarantees of due process, equal protection, and a reliable sentence, as the result of 12 the State’s payment of money and other inducements to key witnesses. To secure Flanagan’s 13 conviction, the State paid key witnesses an excessive amount in exchange for their testimony, 14 withholding full payment until after they testified to the State’s satisfaction (30 AA 7138, Lucas 15 Dec. ¶9; 7 AA 1696; 8 AA 1848). The State did not fully disclose its agreements with the 16 witnesses to the jury or to Flanagan in violation of Brady, Giglio, and Napue, and no cautionary 17 instruction regarding the testimony was given. The inherently unreliable testimony rendered the 18 guilt and sentencing determinations fundamentally unfair and unconstitutional.

19 At the time of Flanagan’s prosecution, this Court’s decision in Franklin v. State, 94 Nev.
20 220, 577 P.2d 860 (1978), overruled by Sheriff, Humboldt County v. Acuna, 107 Nev. 664, 819
21 P.2d 197 (1991), was controlling. In Franklin, this Court held that a defendant is denied due 22 process of law guaranteed by the Nevada and federal constitutions where the State withholds the 23 benefits of the bargain to assure testimony in accord with the prosecutor’s vision of the truth.
24 Franklin, 94 Nev. 220 at 221. Here, two witnesses (Lucas and Saldana) testified that they

25 ¹⁹ To the extent that trial and/or appellate counsel should have raised these claims of misconduct 26 earlier, their failure to do so constitutes deficient and prejudicial representation that deprived 27 Flanagan of his constitutional rights to effective representation and timely and effective review of this misconduct. See, e.g., Evitts v. Lucey, 469 U.S. 387 (1985); Burns v. Gammon, 260 F.3d 892 (8th Cir. 2001) (counsel’s failure to object constitutes deficient performance).

1 expected to receive additional money after the completion of their testimony (7 AA 1708; 8 AA 2 1848). The State's withholding was particularly egregious in the case of Mr. Lucas, who 3 admitted that the testimony he gave at the preliminary hearing and trial was inconsistent with his 4 previous statements to police (7 AA 1696-97). The State paid Lucas $1,000 before the 5 evidentiary hearing and an additional $1,000 after trial (Id.; 7 AA 1708). Lucas' testimony 6 changed as a result of these payments (7 AA 1714). As Franklin was controlling at the time of 7 Flanagan's conviction, the State's withholding of full payment to the witnesses until after they 8 completed their testimony violated Flanagan's constitutional rights.

9 In Sheriff, Humboldt County, this Court abrogated the rule in Franklin in 1991, long after 10 the State's actions in this case, concluding that the State may withhold the benefit, including 11 payment, until after the witness testifies, but only when the State bargains in good faith for 12 testimony represented to be factually accurate. 107 Nev. at 669. The State may not bargain for 13 testimony so particularized that it amounts to following a script, or require that the testimony 14 produce a specific result. Id. at 669; see also U.S. v. Vavages, 151 F.3d 1185 (9th Cir. 1998) 15 (due process violated by prosecution's coercion of witness). Here, the State even violated the 16 rule in Sheriff, Humboldt County, and thus violated Flanagan's due process rights, by bargaining 17 for Lucas' particularized testimony.

18 Lucas testified that he was given a copy of his statement, put in a room by himself, and 19 directed to memorize it (30 AA 7138, Lucas Dec. ¶8). Lucas also was required to rehearse his 20 testimony (Id. at ¶9). Lucas received his $2,000 in two payments, once after he testified at the 21 evidentiary hearing and once after he testified at trial. Id. Based on the timing of these 22 payments, the change from Lucas's prior statements, and the State's actions forcing Lucas to 23 memorize his testimony, the testimony was particularized and coerced.

24 The record establishes that the State also did not bargain in good faith for Saldana's 25 testimony. Saldana admitted that she had sex with Flanagan to elicit information from him (8 26 AA 1819). During this time, Saldana gave police officers information she allegedly retrieved 27 from Flanagan (8 AA 1842-43). When Saldana testified that the case investigators did not ask

1 her to exchange sex for information, the prosecution knew that she was living with Flanagan as 2 his girlfriend (8 AA 1846). Based on Saldana's using sex to get information from Flanagan, the 3 subsequent favorable treatment of her outstanding charges, and the State's knowledge of these 4 exchange, Flanagan's due process rights were violated.

5 Sheriff, Humboldt County also requires that the terms of any agreement, including an 6 agreement for payment of money, must be fully disclosed to the jury and that the defendant or 7 his counsel must be allowed to fully cross examine the witness regarding the terms of the 8 bargain. Id. at 669. This directive was violated when the State did not disclose to the jury the 9 details of its agreement with Saldana, Lucas, and Havens. During its initial examination of the 10 witnesses, the State did not question Lucas, Saldana, or Havens at all regarding the State's 11 payment or promise of payment or favorable treatment for testimony (6 AA 1238-53; 7 AA 12 1595-1635; 8 AA 1746-79). While two of the witnesses were cross-examined to some extent 13 regarding the State's payments, the details of the State's agreements were never fully disclosed 14 to the defense or the jury. The admission of this testimony, without disclosure, violated 15 Flanagan's constitutional rights. See Sheriff, Humboldt County, 107 Nev. at 669.

16 Finally, Sheriff, Humboldt County requires that a cautionary instruction be given to the 17 jury where the State promises consideration in exchange for testimony. Id. at 669. During 18 Flanagan's trial, the jury was not given a cautionary instruction regarding the weight to assign to 19 testimony for which the State paid the witnesses. Indeed, the trial court allowed only a general 20 instruction regarding witness credibility (12 AA 2749). The trial court refused to give requested 21 instructions relating to witness credibility where the witness has an interest in the outcome (12 22 AA 2755b-d). The failure to give the required instruction, where the key witnesses were paid for 23 their testimony, violated Flanagan's constitutional rights. Franklin, 107 Nev. at 669.

24 Flanagan's federal due process rights were similarly violated. Testimony for which the 25 State pays or offers a more lenient sentence is admissible only where the defense and the jury is 26 informed of the nature of the agreement, defense counsel is permitted to cross examine the 27 witness, and the jury is instructed to weigh this testimony with care. See Morris v. Woodford,

1 273 F.3d 826, 835-36 (9th Cir. 2001) (challenge to conviction based on argument that plea
2 agreements induced witnesses to give false testimony). As set forth above, the jurors were not 3 informed of the full nature of the State's agreements with Lucas and Saldana, and no cautionary 4 instruction was given to the jury regarding the testimony. Accordingly, Flanagan's federal 5 constitutional rights were violated. See Gallego v. McDaniel, 124 F.3d 1065, 1078 (9th Cir.
6 1997) (jury needs sufficient information to appraise the biases and motivations of the witness).

8 Flanagan's conviction and death sentence are invalid under state and federal 9 constitutional guarantees of freedom of speech, freedom of religion, due process of law, equal 10 protection, trial by an impartial jury, and a reliable sentence because the State used his actions, 11 statements and writings regarding witchcraft, alleged satanic writings, abstract philosophy and 12 other constitutionally-protected materials at trial even though such evidence was irrelevant.

13 A. The guilt phase was structurally marred by the admission of irrelevant and 14 highly prejudicial evidence regarding Flanagan's abstract beliefs.

15 After Dawson v. Delaware, 503 U.S. 159, 168 (1992), "evidence of a defendant's abstract 16 beliefs" may not be introduced "at a sentencing hearing when those beliefs have no bearing on 17 the issue being tried." This Court (like all the other courts to address the issue) has found this 18 basic principle of First Amendment jurisprudence also applies to the guilt phase. See Flanagan 19 V., 112 Nev. 1409; State of Missouri v. Driscoll, 55 S.W.3d 350, 354 (Sup. Ct. Mo. 2001).
20 Johnny Ray Luckett, a co-defendant, was permitted to introduce highly prejudicial evidence in 21 the guilt phase regarding Flanagan's alleged participation in "black magic" or "Satan worship."
22 Luckett called Wayne Wittig who claimed that Flanagan participated in "what is known as a 23 coven . . . a gathering of people to use, you might say, its basis of Satan to get the most out of 24 life, so to speak . . ." and that Flanagan "was basically – I don't know if the correct word is 25 wizard but he was basically the second in command as far as the coven went. He had actually 26 the first-most power, but there was one power more stronger than his" Wittig also claimed 27 that Flanagan practiced "black magic" which, was allegedly used to "put a hex" on people so that

1 “they would feel pain they wouldn’t normally feel.” (9 AA 2072).

2 This evidence ostensibly was allowed to support Lockett’s claimed defense that his 3 involvement was due to fear of Flanagan and Moore.²⁰ Lockett never introduced any evidence, 4 however, to show how Flanagan’s alleged participation in this “coven” had any connection to 5 this defense. In fact, Lockett presented no evidence that he had any knowledge of Flanagan’s 6 alleged “devil worshipping” activities, or that he was aware of any of the information offered by 7 Wittig (9 AA 2214). Moreover, at the outset of the guilt trial – before any testimony was 8 introduced – Lockett’s counsel announced his intention to portray Flanagan “as, quite frankly, 9 [a] very savage, amoral individual[.]” (4 AA 840). There can be no doubt that Lockett’s 10 introduction of the “devil worship” evidence was part of that alternative defense strategy – the 11 exact use rejected in Dawson as impermissible. See Dawson, 503 U.S. at 167 (evidence of 12 defendant’s religion or associations may not be introduced “simply because the jury would find 13 these beliefs morally reprehensible”). Thus, the court erred in permitting Lockett to introduce 14 evidence of Flanagan’s abstract beliefs solely for the purpose of prejudicing Flanagan.²¹

15 Ironically, while Lockett’s counsel hardly referred to this “devil worshipping” evidence 16 during argument, the prosecution referred to this evidence extensively in its guilt phase closing, 17 using it to malign Flanagan’s character:

18 [the victims] didn’t ask their grandson Dale to come to them and kill them so they 19 could give him and his devil-worshipping buddies a piece of their estate a little 20 more quickly [Flanagan] was going to share [what he thought he would gain 21 from the murders] with all of his friends. Probably divvy it up in the middle of a 22 coven proceeding or something. That’s the agreement. That’s the conspiracy.
That’s the dark and evil plan that was created over a period of time and put into action and finalized on that fateful night [Flanagan and Moore] were, in fact, the main co-conspirators. They were the talkers, they were the planners. They led this thing. They didn’t only lead the coven, they let their black and their white

24 ²⁰ Whatever merit there may be to this defense theory, the only evidence presented to support it 25 – Lockett’s testimony that Moore drew him into a closed room and pointed a gun at him while 26 allegedly demanding Lockett’s cooperation – tended to establish that Moore, alone, and not Flanagan, coerced Lockett into participating in the crimes charged (9 AA 2214). Indeed, even the prosecution noted in its closing “it was contended that Mr. Moore is the user of white magic
. . . the white is important because the one who uses white is the manipulator.” (11 AA 2704).

27 ²¹ Flanagan’s counsel objected to this evidence at several points in the trial by requesting, at the outset, severance of the trials, and then later requesting a mistrial (2 AA 388, 401; 4 AA 837).

1 magic spill over into this conspiracy (11 AA 2501, 2511, 2519.)

2 Indeed, even the prosecution conceded the irrelevance of this evidence: “and then Lockett 3 through his attorney decided to project this notion of white and black magic into the case. I 4 don’t know that it has any relevance.” (11 AA 2704). Thus, the prosecution’s use of this 5 evidence was highly improper, as this Court has already found: “[the coven] evidence was 6 irrelevant to the crimes charged, and the prosecutor improperly used it in the guilt phase simply 7 to demonstrate the appellants’ bad character.” Flanagan V, 112 Nev. at 1418.

8 B. The erroneous admission of evidence of Satan-worship during the guilt phase 9 requires relief.

10 Flanagan’s constitutional rights to free expression and due process unquestionably were 11 violated by the trial court admitting irrelevant and highly prejudicial evidence. See, e.g., 12 Dawson, 503 U.S. at 164; Donnelly, 416 U.S. at 643 (reversal required when error “so infected 13 the trial with unfairness as to make the resulting conviction a denial of due process”).

14 Having established the existence of a constitutional violation, the question becomes 15 whether the error was sufficiently prejudicial to require reversal. This Court has already found 16 that “there is no room for a harmless-error analysis” when a Dawson error is committed during 17 the penalty phase of a capital offense. Flanagan IV, 846 P.2d 1053, 1058. Although Flanagan 18 believes that this rationale is equally applicable to the guilt phase, this Court need not revisit its 19 contrary holding in Flanagan IV because the prejudice was manifest.

20 The improperly introduced evidence is of the most inflammatory type. It is self evident 21 that our society associates satanic worship with evil practices. See State v. Leitner, 34 P.3d 42, 22 56 (Kan. 2001) (“It seems evident that our culture associates witchcraft with satanic worship and 23 other evil practices. Any mention of a defendant’s involvement with witchcraft is highly 24 prejudicial.”). Permitting introduction of this evidence not only improperly tainted the jury’s 25 impression of Flanagan, but also severely impinged on his right to testify given the great taint to 26 his credibility. Moreover, the fact that the victims of the murders were Flanagan’s grandparents 27 placed Flanagan in a different position from his co-defendants. As the prosecutor argued in his

1 closing, the only thing perhaps more heinous than pre-meditated murder is pre-meditated murder
2 of one's family members (11 AA 2684). When added to this fact, the improperly introduced 3 evidence that Flanagan worshipped Satan virtually sealed his fate in the guilt phase.

4 Finally, by repeatedly referring to the "devil worshipping" evidence in its closing, the 5 State gave its imprimatur to the evidence, thus encouraging the jury to consider and rely on the 6 evidence. In this way, the State used the evidence to sway the jury to its version of the events.
7 Given the poor quality and obvious bias and reputation for lying of the State's witnesses, the 8 State clearly seized on the devil worship evidence as evidence that placed Flanagan in lower 9 esteem than the prosecution's line-up of convicted criminals, drug users, liars and prostitutes 10 who testified against him. See State v. Kimbrell, 320 N.C. 762, 768, 360 S.E.2d 691 (1987) 11 ("[t]he real effect of questions about devil worship . . . and the like, which in this particular case 12 had little or no probative value, can only have been to arouse the passion and prejudice of the 13 jury."); State v. Tate, 341 N.W.2d 63, 64-65 (Iowa Ct. App. 1983) (defendant denied fair trial 14 where prosecution introduced evidence that could lead the jury to conclude that defendant was a 15 Satan worshipper, such conclusion which "would obviously be highly prejudicial to his case").

16 Given how highly prejudicial and totally irrelevant to any issue in this case the evidence 17 of devil worship was, it is impossible to find, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the improperly 18 admitted evidence did not affect the outcome of the trial. Indeed, the evidence against Flanagan 19 was almost entirely circumstantial, based on hearsay and introduced through witnesses who were 20 being paid by the prosecutor (either in cash or in reduced sentences) to give the testimony. The 21 evidence of devil worship unfairly buttressed the prosecution's case to Flanagan's detriment.²²

22 Claim 4

23 Flanagan's conviction and death sentence are invalid under the state and federal

24
25 ²² This Court previously has inferred that the jury gave little weight to this evidence and was 26 "aware of the self-serving nature of Lockett's evidence of occult activities and his claim that he 27 was compelled to commit the crimes," from the fact the jury convicted Lockett. Flanagan V, 112 Nev. at 1420. However, this inference does not necessarily support a finding that introduction of the devil worship evidence was not prejudicial to Flanagan. In fact, this evidence was even more harmful and prejudicial to Flanagan because of his relationship to the victims of the crimes.

1 constitutional guarantees of effective assistance of counsel, due process of law, equal protection 2 of the laws, cross examination and confrontation, and a reliable sentence due to the failure of 3 trial counsel to provide reasonably effective assistance.

4 The Sixth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution and Nevada state counterpart guaranteed 5 Flanagan the right to the effective assistance of counsel. See Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S.
6 668, 687 (1984). A habeas petitioner establishes entitlement to by demonstrating that counsel's 7 performance was deficient and that prejudice resulted from the deficiencies. See Rompilla v.
8 Beard, 125 S.Ct. 2456, 2005 WL 1421390 (June 20, 2005); Wiggins v. Smith, 539 U.S. 510, 123
9 S.Ct. 2527 (2003); Strickland, 466 U.S. at 687. Deficient performance occurs when "counsel's 10 representation fell below an objective standard of reasonableness." Strickland, 466 U.S. at 688.
11 Prejudice is a "reasonable probability that, but for counsel's unprofessional errors, the result of 12 the proceeding would have been different. A reasonable probability is a probability sufficient to 13 undermine confidence in the outcome." Id. at 693-94.

14 Although Flanagan presented compelling reasons why his Sixth Amendment rights were 15 violated, supported with ample evidence, the court improperly denied this claim without the 16 opportunity to develop and present additional supporting evidence. Instead, the court denied 17 Flanagan's motions for funds (34 AA [filed under seal] 8113), discovery (27 AA 6537, 30 AA 18 7282), and a full evidentiary hearing (30 AA 7312). The District Court compounded its errors by 19 conducting a restricted and truncated hearing on the narrowest of issues (30 AA 7326) and then 20 adopted verbatim the State's version of the facts (31 AA 7530). Under these circumstances, the 21 court abdicated its responsibility to provide a fair forum, and this Court should remand the case 22 for full development of the claim. See, e.g., Marshall, 885 P.2d at 606.

23 A. First Trial

24 The trial court appointed Randall Pike to represent Flanagan just days prior to the 25 evidentiary hearing, after the Clark County Public Defender's Office successfully moved to 26 withdraw, apparently after conducting no investigation or pretrial preparation, due to an alleged 27 conflict of interest which is entirely unexplained in the record (2 AA 252-53). Mr. Pike's

1 appointment was confirmed on August 7, 1985 (2 AA 260). Mr. Pike was inexperienced, had no 2 time to prepare for that hearing or for the trial, conducted no meaningful investigation despite 3 obvious unresolved issues, missed repeated opportunities to exploit inconsistencies in testimony 4 between the evidentiary hearing and trial, generally offered only the most minimal of defenses, 5 and offered virtually nothing in the way of mitigating evidence in the penalty phase.

6 1. Inadequate Investigation and Trial Preparation

7 Mr. Pike's inadequate investigation and trial preparation is demonstrated by a multitude 8 of errors. At the time he was appointed, Mr. Pike had been practicing law for only three years, 9 two of which had been in the District Attorney's Office (30 AA 7148, Pike Aff. ¶1). He had not 10 previously handled a capital case as a defense lawyer (Id. ¶3).

11 Flanagan has established his entitlement to relief because Pike rendered 12 unconstitutionally deficient representation by failing to investigate and present a credible 13 defense. The Court in Strickland held that "counsel has a duty to make reasonable investigations 14 or to make a reasonable decision that makes particular investigations unnecessary." 466 U.S. at 15 691.²³ It is axiomatic that defense counsel has an obligation "to investigate all witnesses who 16 allegedly possessed knowledge concerning the defendant's guilt or innocence." Henderson v.
17 Sargent, 926 F.2d 706, 711 (8th Cir.), amended, 939 F.2d 586 (1991). Without conducting an 18 adequate investigation, counsel fails to provide a defendant with effective assistance guaranteed 19 by the U.S. Constitution. See, e.g., Johnson v. Baldwin, 114 F.3d 835 (9th Cir. 1997) (granting 20 relief where trial counsel failed to investigate possible defense); Harris ex rel. Ramseyer v.
21 Wood, 64 F.3d 1432 (9th Cir. 1995) (counsel rendered deficient performance in failing to 22 investigate facts and possible defenses or to investigate petitioner's mental and emotional status).

23 Flanagan unquestionably established that Mr. Pike rendered deficient performance. Mr.

24 ²³ See also Chambers v. Armontrout, 907 F.2d 825, 828 (8th Cir. 1990) ("The decision to 25 interview a potential witness is not a decision related to trial strategy. Rather, it is a decision 26 related to adequate preparation for trial."); Lawrence v. Armontrout, 900 F.2d 127, 130 (8th Cir.
27 1990) (counsel must adequately investigate, consider viable theories, and develop evidence to support those theories); State v. Love, 109 Nev. 1136, 865 P.2d 322, 325 (1993) ("Legal and factual judgments erroneously made because of inadequate investigation may be deemed ineffective assistance of counsel."); Doleman v. State, 112 Nev. 843, 921 P.2d 278 (1996).

1 Pike made no requests for investigation funds necessary to explore possible defenses. Mr. Pike 2 undertook no investigation other than to meet briefly with Flanagan's father, who was not a 3 witness to the crime and whom Pike believed possessed little relevant information (30 AA 7148, 4 Pike Aff. ¶¶6, 10). Pike only perfunctorily interviewed a few of the State's witnesses (Id. at ¶¶7, 5 10). In short, he conducted no meaningful investigation.

6 The most significant inadequacy was Mr. Pike's failure to learn of, interview, and call at 7 trial Robert Ramirez, who would have testified to Flanagan's actual innocence (30 AA 7186, 8 Ramirez Dec. ¶¶12, 13, 19). Ramirez would have testified that, rather than acting as ringleader 9 and trigger man as he was portrayed at trial, Flanagan was actively trying to prevent the murders
10 and put himself at risk of death in doing so. Id. The failure to discover and present this evidence 11 was prejudicial. "Pretrial investigation and preparation are the keys to effective representation of 12 counsel." U.S. v. Tucker, 716 F.2d 576, 581 (9th Cir. 1983).

13 Mr. Pike's failure to investigate the crime scene and other guilt phase evidence similarly 14 violated Flanagan's Sixth Amendment rights.²⁴ Although there were inconsistencies at trial 15 between testimony and physical evidence, such as blood spatters, fingerprints, and bullet 16 trajectories (30 AA 7148, Pike Aff. ¶10), Pike did not seek funds for or hire any forensic experts 17 to review this issues. The absence of Flanagan's fingerprints at the crime scene was a significant 18 fact that Pike failed to investigate and exploit at trial (Id. ¶¶7, 8). This fact alone, if properly 19 presented, could have raised significant doubt about the prosecution's case. When coupled with 20 the numerous other weaknesses in the State's case, it is reasonably probable that outcome would 21 have been different. The District Court's failure to permit Flanagan to develop evidence to 22 support this claim and to hold a hearing requires reversal. See Marshall, 110 Nev. 1328, 1331; 23 U.S. v. Schaflander, 743 F.2d 714, 717 (9th Cir. 1984). In such a circumstance, a hearing must 24 be granted. See, e.g., Siripongs v. Calderon, 35 F.3d 1308 (9th Cir. 1994) (evidentiary hearing 25 necessary where petitioner demonstrated counsel's failure to investigate potential guilt defenses).

26 ²⁴ See, e.g., Avila v. Galaza, 297 F.3d 911 (9th Cir. 2002) (granting relief because defense 27 counsel did not investigate circumstances of the killing); Baylor v. Estelle, 94 F.3d 1321 (9th Cir. 1996) (granting relief for counsel's failure to examine and challenge physical evidence).

1 Pike's failures to conduct the investigation necessary to render constitutionally 2 appropriate representation cannot be deemed an informed or strategic decision. Despite all the 3 work that needed to be done, Pike failed to move for a continuance to accomplish the necessary
4 preparation to defend Flanagan (30 AA 7148, Pike Aff. ¶12). The mere failure to seek a 5 continuance when appropriate, even without the exacerbating factors enumerated above, has 6 been held to constitute the basis for a finding of ineffective counsel. See, e.g., Turpin v. Bennett, 7 525 S.E. 2d 354 (Ga. 2000) (counsel ineffective in capital case for failure to seek continuance 8 when expert defense psychiatrist changed testimony as a result of impaired mental state).

9 Mr. Pike's performance with respect to Flanagan's mental state at the time of the crime 10 and prior to and during trial required the District Court to hold an evidentiary hearing and grant 11 relief. "Trial counsel has a duty to investigate a defendant's mental state if there is evidence to 12 suggest that the defendant is impaired."²⁵ Once this duty arises, counsel's investigation of the 13 issue must be reasonable. See, e.g., Strickland, 466 U.S. at 691; Douglas, 316 F.3d at 1085. Mr.
14 Pike did not investigate or present a diminished capacity defense for Flanagan despite the three-15 day drug and alcohol binge he had engaged in immediately preceding the crimes (30 AA 7148, 16 Pike Aff. ¶10). Mr. Pike's failure to conduct such an investigation unconstitutionally deprived 17 Flanagan of a meritorious guilt defense.²⁶

18 Similarly, Mr. Pike had no mental or physical tests performed on Flanagan to determine 19 whether he was competent to stand trial (30 AA 7151, Pike Aff. ¶10). In addition, although Pike 20 occasionally met with Flanagan at the Clark County Detention Center (Id.), he failed to obtain 21 jail medical records which would have revealed to him that Flanagan was receiving substantial

23 ²⁵ Douglas v. Woodford, 316 F.3d 1079, 1085 (9th Cir. 2003) (citing Bean v. Calderon, 163 24 F.3d 1073, 1077 (9th Cir. 1998)); see also Seidel v. Merkle, 146 F.3d 750 (9th Cir. 1998) (counsel rendered ineffective assistance in failing to conduct any investigation into possible ramifications of defendant's psychiatric impairment).

25 ²⁶ See, e.g., Bloom v. Calderon, 132 F.3d 1267, 1277 (9th Cir. 1997) (counsel's failure to obtain 26 a psychiatric expert until shortly before trial, combined with counsel's failure to adequately prepare and present his expert at trial, constitutes constitutionally deficient representation); 27 Jennings v. Woodford, 290 F.3d 1006, 1013 (9th Cir. 2002) (attorney's failure to investigate may amount to constitutionally deficient performance in either guilt or penalty phase).

1 psychotropic medications that rendered him incompetent to stand trial (Id. ¶¶7, 10). Pike failed 2 to raise a doubt about Flanagan's competence to stand trial, object to the forced medication of his 3 client, or otherwise ensure that Flanagan participated in his defense.²⁷

4 2. Inadequate Pretrial Motions and Trial Conduct.

5 Defense counsel in a capital case has the duty to utilize pretrial and in limine procedures
6 to ensure a fundamentally fair trial process. See, e.g., Jackson v. Calderon, 211 F.3d 1148 (9th 7 Cir. 2000) (counsel ineffective for failing to request in limine ruling or move to exclude 8 objectionable evidence). The record is replete with instances in which Mr. Pike failed to fulfill 9 this obligation. First, Mr. Pike failed to challenge the vague complaint against Flanagan or the 10 broader charges presented to the Court. Though the complaint charged Flanagan with one 11 murder (1 AA 19), he was convicted of two (12 AA 2761-62). Mr. Pike's implicit consent to 12 this expansion renders his counsel ineffective. See, e.g., Wilcox v. McGee, 241 F.3d 1242 (9th 13 Cir. 2001) (counsel ineffective for failing to move to dismiss indictment).

14 Second, Mr. Pike failed to object or to move for a motion in limine to exclude witchcraft 15 evidence that Lockett proffered (30 AA 7148, Pike Aff. ¶13). Although Mr. Pike did move for 16 severance of Flanagan's trial from that of his co-defendants, he failed to argue that Lockett's 17 defense need not include the witchcraft evidence that proved so prejudicial (Id.). Mr. Pike's 18 failure to exclude this evidence rendered his counsel ineffective.²⁸

19 Third, Mr. Pike failed to ensure Flanagan's right to a fair and impartial jury by failing to 20 object to the trial court's requirement that all defense counsel agree on the exercise of 21 peremptory challenges (5 AA 1136). In addition, he acquiesced in the use of a preemptory

23 ²⁷ See, e.g., Hull v. Kyler, 190 F.3d 88, 111 (3rd Cir. 1999) ("when a defendant's own attorney 24 fails to effectively use the procedures to determine competency that are mandated by Supreme 25 Court precedent, we believe that the prejudice to the possibly still-incompetent defendant is manifest"); Williamson v. Ward, 110 F.3d 1508 (10th Cir. 1997) (reasonable attorney in a capital case would have undertaken a competency evaluation).

26 ²⁸ See, e.g., Crotts v. Smith, 73 F.3d 861 (9th Cir. 1996) (counsel's failure to object to 27 prejudicial testimony required relief); Mitchell v. State, 298 S.C. 186, 379 S.E.2d 123 (1989) (counsel held ineffective in murder case for failing to object to inadmissible evidence of devil worship and Mafia membership).

1 challenge that was not in Flanagan's interest. See, e.g., Harris ex. rel. Ramseyer, 64 F.3d 1432 2 (counsel rendered deficient performance, inter alia, for failing to conduct proper voir dire).
3 Fourth, Mr. Pike failed to cross examine all key witnesses on prior statements and testimony to 4 exploit the inconsistencies throughout the guilt trial (30 AA 7148, Pike Aff. ¶16).²⁹ For 5 example, he failed to cross examine or argue about the inconsistencies between different 6 witnesses regarding the method of breaking the window through which entry was allegedly 7 achieved. One witness said the window was broken by a closet pole that was introduced into 8 evidence, yet there were no glass shards or evidence of it having been involved in breaking the 9 window (30 AA 7148, Pike Aff. ¶¶7, 17; 8 AA 1774; 7 AA 1624). Another witness testified that 10 Flanagan himself broke the window with his fist, yet there was no cross examination about 11 wounds to Flanagan's hand (3 AA 609; 6 AA 1440; 30 AA 7148, Pike Aff. ¶¶7, 17; 2 AA 323-12 24; 9 AA 2043; 9 AA 2076-89; 11 AA 2520).

13 Similarly, Mr. Pike failed to cross examine Wayne Wittig to illustrate that his testimony 14 contained the same errors as newspaper stories about the case, thus demonstrating his lack of 15 personal knowledge concerning the facts to which he testified (9 AA 2045; 30 AA 7148, Pike 16 Aff. ¶18). Nor did Pike cross examine Wittig about his telephone being out of service at the time 17 of an alleged conversation with Flanagan, which could easily have been bolstered by 18 investigation of telephone records (9 AA 2045; 30 AA 7148, Pike Aff. ¶18).

19 Mr. Pike failed to investigate Ms. Saldana's criminal record, which should have been 20 apparent since she testified at a pretrial hearing in jail clothing (8 AA 1813-33; 30 AA 7148, 21 Pike Aff. ¶19). The importance of Saldana's testimony would have been diminished by full 22 disclosure of her criminal background and her need to satisfy the prosecution with her testimony.

23 Finally, Mr. Pike failed to object to the presence of armed guards in the courtroom (30 24 AA 7148, Pike Aff. ¶19), or to Flanagan being seen in shackles by jurors (30 AA 7137,

26 ²⁹ See, e.g., Driscoll v. Delo, 71 F.3d 701 (8th Cir. 1995) (counsel ineffective for failing to 27 conduct adequate cross-examination of serologist or to impeach other witness with prior inconsistent testimony); Moffett v. Kolb, 930 F.2d 1156 (7th Cir. 1991) (counsel ineffective for failing to introduce the prior inconsistent statements of two state witnesses).

1 Buchanan Dec. ¶2), which are inherent violations of Flanagan's constitutional rights.

2 3. Inadequate Preparation for Penalty Phase.

3 At the time of Flanagan's three capital trials, reasonably competent counsel recognized 4 that a thorough investigation of the defendant's background and family history, including his 5 medical, mental health, academic, and social history, was essential to the adequate preparation of 6 a potential penalty phase defense.³⁰ The U.S. Supreme Court recently reaffirmed the duty to 7 investigate, even when the initial questioning of the defendant and family members fail to 8 uncover potential mitigation. Rompilla, 2005 WL 1421390 *3 ("We hold that even when a 9 capital defendant's family members and the defendant himself have suggested that no mitigating 10 evidence is available, his lawyer is bound to make reasonable efforts to obtain and review 11 material that counsel knows the prosecution will probably rely on as evidence of aggravation at 12 the sentencing phase of trial.").

13 Mr. Pike failed to conduct any mitigation investigation (30 AA 7148, Pike Aff. ¶10). He 14 conducted virtually no investigation of Flanagan's life growing up, drug addiction, or any other 15 aspect of his background. Moreover, he did not seek the appointment of appropriate 16 professionals, including a psychiatrist. Id. Had he done so, he would have discovered that 17 Flanagan suffered extreme abuse at the hands of his parents and grandparents and suffers from 18 significant mental impairments, as discussed more fully below.³¹ Without a sufficient 19 investigation, a capital defense attorney cannot make reasoned tactical decisions "precisely 20 because counsel did not even know what evidence was available." Silva, 279 F. 3d at 847.

22 ³⁰ See, e.g., Wiggins, 123 S.Ct. at 2537 ("The ABA Guidelines provide that investigations into 23 mitigating evidence 'should comprise efforts to discover all reasonably available mitigating 24 evidence and evidence to rebut any aggravating evidence that may be introduced by the prosecutor.'"); Williams, 529 U.S. 362 (counsel deficient for failing to prepare for sentencing hearing until a week before trial and failing to conduct an investigation that would have uncovered extensive records "graphically describing [petitioner's] nightmarish childhood").

25 ³¹ See, e.g., Caro v. Woodford, 280 F.3d 1247, 1249-50 (9th Cir. 2002) (counsel ineffective for 26 failing to prepare and present evidence of history of exposure to toxic pesticides, head injuries, and child abuse); Silva v. Woodford, 279 F.3d 825 (9th Cir. 2002) (counsel ineffective for failing 27 to prepare and present evidence of abuse and neglect, possibility of Fetal Alcohol Syndrome, Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder, drug use, and amphetamine-induced organic mental disorders).

1 Mr. Pike failed to object to improper jury instructions (12 AA 2726, 2734, 2755, 2744).
2 See Thomas, 83 P.3d at 823-24 (granting penalty phase relief for trial counsel's failure to object 3 to inappropriate instructions). Mr. Pike also failed to object to the use of the "great risk" 4 aggravator or request instructions that would have required a nexus between the burglary and 5 robbery that were used by the State as aggravators to support the death sentence. See Claims 12, 6 14, and 15, infra. Finally, he failed to object to the improper double counting of the felony 7 murder aggravator. See Claim 16, infra.

8 B. Second Trial

9 1. Conflicts of Interest

10 In the second trial, Flanagan was represented by the Clark County Public Defender's 11 office (14 AA 3191). However, as stated above, at the first trial, the Public Defender's office 12 had successfully moved to withdraw due to a conflict of interest (2 AA 252, 254). Although no 13 explanation appears on the record for this conflict, neither does any explanation appear for its 14 resolution. Without a resolution, the ethical conflict must be presumed to continue.

15 In Cuyler v. Sullivan, 446 U.S. 335, 348-50 (1980), the Court held that prejudice is 16 presumed under the Sixth Amendment when the counsel had an actual conflict of interest that 17 adversely affected performance. Subsequently, in Wood v. Georgia, 450 U.S. 261 (1981), the 18 Court held that the mere possibility of a conflict of interest was sufficient to impose a duty on the 19 trial court to inquire further and characterized Cuyler as mandating a reversal when the trial court 20 has failed to make an inquiry under these circumstances. 450 U.S. at 271, n.18. In addition, 21 defense counsel has an obligation to inform the trial court of the existence of a conflict of 22 interest. Holloway v. Arkansas, 435 U.S. 475, 485-86 (1978).

23 Here, both defense counsel and the trial court violated their respective obligations to 24 address and resolve this issue in all subsequent proceedings. The trial court made no such 25 inquiry in Flanagan's second trial (14 AA 3191-18 AA 4197), notwithstanding the admitted 26 conflict of interest by the Clark County Public Defender's office in the first trial (2 AA 252-53).
27 The existence of the conflict at the first trial was more than sufficient to require the trial court to

1 inquire further about it at the second trial. The trial court's failure to do so requires the 2 automatic reversal of Flanagan's sentence. See note 14, supra. Furthermore, as stated below, the 3 District Court committed the error at the third trial.

4 2. Inadequate Investigation and Trial Preparation

5 Just as in the first trial, Flanagan's counsel in the second trial, Mr. Dahl, devoted 6 inadequate resources to the task, failed to conduct an adequate investigation and did virtually 7 nothing to avoid the imposition of the death penalty. Mr. Dahl failed to move to sever 8 Flanagan's trial from his co-defendant, Randolph Moore (14 AA 3196-16 AA 3700). Without 9 such a motion, the jury was permitted to misuse evidence of Moore's participation in the crimes 10 against Flanagan. See, e.g., Hernandez v. Cowan, 200 F.3d 995 (7th Cir. 2000) (counsel 11 ineffective for failure to move for severance from a co-defendant with antagonistic defenses).
12 Mr. Dahl unreasonably failed to secure a fair and impartial jury by objecting to the prosecutor's 13 improper use of peremptory challenges. See Claim 1.D, supra; Gov't. of Virgin Islands v. Forte, 14 865 F.2d 59 (3rd Cir. 1989) (counsel ineffective for failure to object to prosecutor's use of 15 peremptory challenges to excuse Caucasian jurors). Mr. Dahl similarly did not conduct any 16 substantial mitigation investigation, failed to hire a mitigation expert, did no psychological or 17 psychiatric investigation and hired no such experts (14 AA 3191-18 AA 4197).

18 C. Third Trial

19 1. Inadequate Investigation and Trial Preparation.

20 In the third trial, Flanagan was once again represented by the Clark County Public 21 Defender's Office (19 AA 4534). For the reasons stated above, without a resolution of the 22 ethical conflict that existed in the first trial, the conflict must be presumed to continue to exist 23 and counsel again must be deemed ineffective per se.

24 Once again, the Public Defender's Office devoted inadequate resources to Flanagan's 25 case (30 AA 7204, Blaskey Aff. ¶3). Although two counsel were assigned to the case, Rebecca 26 Blaskey and David Wall, they kept separate files and did not communicate in preparation for trial 27 (Id.). The Public Defender's Office was overloaded with cases and was unable to devote adequate resources to Flanagan's case (Id. ¶7). For example, Mr. Wall was appointed just 90 days before the trial and spent virtually no time with Flanagan before the trial began (Id. ¶¶6, 7). Mr. Wall opted not to meet Flanagan at Ely State Prison on the day selected for such a meeting and chose instead to play golf (Id. ¶6). Wall waited until just before the trial to meet Flanagan and thus was inadequately prepared for the trial.

The inadequate preparation proved devastating to the defense. Although counsel recognized the need to employ a mental health expert, they failed to provide that expert with an appropriate referral question, necessary background material and information, and sufficient time to evaluate Flanagan and render an opinion about his mental functioning and possible mitigation. Indeed, the expert was able to examine Flanagan very briefly and just days before trial began (Id. ¶4).³² They hired no mitigation expert and did virtually no mitigation investigation (Id. ¶3).

Counsel also failed to move to sever Flanagan's case from that of Randolph Moore, thus failing to present an individualized case in defense of Flanagan. The failure to seek severance made counsel ineffective. See Claim 4.B.2, supra.

2. Inadequate Pretrial Motions and Trial Conduct

Flanagan's Sixth Amendment rights were further violated by conflicts that developed as a result of the breakdown in the working relationship between Blaskey and Wall and as a result of institutional decisions made in the Clark County Public Defender's Office that were adverse to Flanagan's interests (Id. ¶¶3, 8, 10). The breakdown between Blaskey and Wall created a hostile defense team environment that precluded any cooperation between the attorneys and adversely affected Flanagan's defense. Similarly, the institutional conflict of interest impaired Flanagan's attorneys' ability to make independent decisions regarding strategy, the availability of resources, the ability of counsel to seek continuances, and the preparation of a defense, all of which adversely affected Flanagan's defense at trial. As a result of this breakdown, Flanagan was ³² Counsel compounded their failure to prepare their expert by voluntarily turning over the expert's raw data and materials to the prosecution, thus enabling the prosecution to conduct a devastating cross examination of the expert (Id. ¶4). See, e.g., Fisher v. Gibson, 282 F.3d 1283 (10th Cir. 2002) (counsel ineffective for eliciting damaging testimony); U.S. v. Villalpando, 259 F.3d 934 (8th Cir. 2001) (counsel ineffective for eliciting damaging testimony).

1 deprived of a fair trial. When a key witness for Flanagan could not be present for the trial (Id.
2 ¶8), Ms. Blaskey's request for permission from her superiors to seek a continuance was denied 3 (Id.), a result that deprived Flanagan of effective assistance of counsel.

4 3. Inadequate Preparation for Penalty Phase.

5 Counsel did not conduct any substantial mitigation investigation, failed to hire a 6 mitigation expert, did no psychological or psychiatric investigation, did very little investigation 7 of Flanagan's adaptation to prison life, and presented minimal evidence on that point (Id. ¶¶3, 4, 8 10). See, e.g., Karis v. Calderon, 283 F.3d 1117, 1133 n.9 (9th Cir. 2002) (penalty phase counsel 9 is "required to find and try to interview (either directly or through an investigator) all persons 10 who were material witnesses to the client's genetic heritage, social history and life history").

11 D. Trial Counsel's Deficiencies Caused Prejudice.

12 1. Guilt Phase Prejudice.

13 First, had Mr. Pike done even a modicum of investigation, he would have learned that 14 Robert Ramirez was a leader of the Aces gang, to which some defendants belonged. He would 15 further have learned that Ramirez could testify that Flanagan did not participate in the murders, 16 and actively tried to prevent them, to the point of placing his own life in jeopardy (30 AA 7186, 17 Ramirez Dec. ¶¶12, 13). This evidence would have created reasonable doubt that may well have 18 led to a not guilty verdict for Flanagan (30 AA 7137, Buchanan Dec.).

19 Second, an adequate investigation by Mr. Pike would have demonstrated that Flanagan 20 was extremely unlikely to have participated in the crime. Witnesses routinely described him as a 21 follower, a quiet person, someone unlikely to participate in such a crime (30 AA 7138, Lucas
22 Dec. ¶¶25, 26; 30 AA 7168, Samples-Smith Dec. ¶4; 30 AA 7170, Wittig Dec. ¶¶3-7, 10-12; 30 23 AA 7191, Thayer Dec. ¶3).

24 Third, trial counsel unreasonably failed to examine the crime scene evidence, interview 25 potential crime witnesses, and obtain expert assistance in assessing the prosecution's case (30 26 AA 7204, Blaskey Aff. ¶¶3, 10; 30 AA 7145, Havens Dec. ¶10; 30 AA 7170, Wittig Dec. ¶44; 27 30 AA 7138, Lucas Dec. ¶24; 30 AA 7186, Ramirez Dec. ¶19). Had trial counsel undertaken

1 even a rudimentary investigation and prepared for the guilt trial, he would have been able to 2 demonstrate that the State's version of the crime was inconsistent with the physical evidence 3 obtained at the crime scene and the accounts of those present. In addition, trial counsel would 4 have disproved the State's theory that Flanagan participated in planning the crime or that he was 5 motivated by any inheritance. Indeed, trial counsel would have been able to demonstrate the 6 opposite (30 AA 7194, Saldana-Ficklin Dec. ¶¶2-12; 30 AA 7170, Wittig Dec. ¶¶34-36; 30 AA 7 7158, McDowell Dec. ¶13). But for counsel's unprofessional errors, the result of the 8 proceedings would have been different.

9 Fourth, had trial counsel rendered constitutionally adequate representation, he would 10 have been able to prove that Flanagan was under the influence of powerful psychotropic drugs 11 on the night of the crime, which, combined with his pre-existing mental condition, rendered him 12 incapable of formulating any plan or intention to kill (30 AA 7194, Saldana-Ficklin Dec.
13 ¶¶11-12). Had trial counsel properly developed and presented the testimony of readily available 14 experts, the jury would have heard compelling evidence concerning, inter alia, Flanagan's 15 multiple mental dysfunctions, the debilitating physical and psychological effects of his traumatic 16 and violent childhood and his deteriorating psycho-social functioning at the time of the crime (30 17 AA 7207, Kriegler Dec. ¶¶37-42).

18 2. Penalty Phase Prejudice.

19 During each penalty phase, trial counsel presented some evidence about Flanagan's 20 background, childhood, and mental functioning (12 AA 2769-71, 2774-76; 17 AA 3953-59; 24 21 AA 5669-92; 30 AA 7207, Kriegler Dec. ¶¶7-42). Rather than a compelling and corroborated 22 case in mitigation, however, the jury heard a misleading and incomplete view of Flanagan's life 23 and character. The jury did not hear testimony from those who witnessed the debilitating effects 24 of the abuse and strife on Flanagan as an infant, toddler, and child, as discussed below.
25 Numerous witnesses could have testified that Flanagan suffered severe, protracted, and sadistic 26 physical and psychological abuse, often at the hands of his grandparents. In addition, the jury 27 never learned that Flanagan's family history was fraught with alcoholism, mental illness, mental

1 disturbance, and domestic violence (30 AA 7207, Kriegler Dec. ¶¶9-12, 18-20 and 34). Had this 2 evidence been presented, the sentence almost certainly would have been less than death (30 AA
3 7135, Nosal Dec. ¶3; 30 AA 7137, Buchanan Dec. ¶3; 30 AA 7184, Martinez Dec. ¶¶3 and 4; 4 see generally, 30 AA 7207, Kriegler Dec.).

5 At the third penalty hearing, the court-appointed defense expert testified that Flanagan 6 was "not able to give the kind of in depth information about himself" that the expert needed, that 7 it was difficult to "get a strong idea" of Flanagan's childhood experiences and family 8 relationships, and that Flanagan was not able to answer questions commensurate with his 9 intelligence (24 AA 5743). The expert further testified that it would have been helpful to know 10 the details of the offense but was not provided the autopsy and police reports (24 AA 5780, 11 5783). Had the expert been provided the kind of information detailed above, the expert would 12 have testified that Flanagan was severely and chronically abused by his parents and 13 grandparents, that as a result of the abuse he suffered major mental disorders including post 14 traumatic stress disorder, depression, and chemical dependency, that he was intoxicated at the 15 time of the offense, that he was extremely remorseful for his actions and those of his friends, that 16 he acted under the domination of others, that he lacked the capacity to conform his conduct to the 17 law, and his actions had to be viewed against his background as a child and adolescent, all of 18 which would have led to a sentence less than death (30 AA 7207, Kriegler Dec.).

19 Trial counsel was ineffective for failing to secure for the court appointed expert sufficient 20 time to conduct a reliable and competent assessment of Flanagan's mental status. Trial counsel 21 scheduled the mental status examination of Flanagan for three days before trial, a time frame too 22 short to allow the expert to conduct the kind of clinical interviews critical to determining the role 23 of trauma in Flanagan's life (30 AA 7204, Blaskey Aff. ¶4). Had the expert been given 24 sufficient time to conduct the clinical interviews with Flanagan, he would have concluded that 25 Flanagan suffered from major mental disorders including post traumatic stress disorder and

1 depression and would have discovered the facts detailed above.³³

2 Trial counsel unreasonably and prejudicially failed to retain and present experts to 3 review, synopsise, and explain Flanagan's social history and to provide a context within which 4 the jury could evaluate the mitigation presented. Employing an expert with qualifications in 5 family dynamics and child abuse would have resulted in a complete investigation into Flanagan's 6 family history, mental illness, and psychological disorders. Moreover, the presentation of such 7 an expert would have permitted the jury to understand the mitigating social dynamics and 8 influences that shaped Flanagan's life and behavior and would have provided a context for 9 understanding penalty phase witnesses' testimony, thereby leading to a sentence less than death.

10 Claim 5

11 Flanagan's conviction and death sentence are invalid under state and federal 12 constitutional guarantees of due process, equal protection, trial before an impartial jury, reliable 13 sentence and effective assistance of counsel because he was incompetent to stand trial.
14 Moreover, trial counsel's failure to invoke a formal competency hearing, and the District Court's 15 failure to order such a hearing, violated Flanagan's constitutional guarantees.

16 The record amply established Flanagan's entitlement to relief on this claim. There is a 17 wealth of information relating to Flanagan's functioning, including medical evaluations, witness 18 accounts, and documents to establish his major mental dysfunctions and which put the trial court 19 and defense counsel on notice that he was incompetent to stand trial. Flanagan's mental 20 difficulties, beginning from early childhood, up to and including his psychotic behavior at the 21 time of the crime and his multiple suicide attempts, his subsequently documented mental illness 22 while incarcerated awaiting trial, his medication regimen prescribed by jail psychiatric staff,

23 ³³ Trial counsel's failure to secure adequate facilities for a competent mental health evaluation 24 similarly prejudiced Flanagan. At the 1995 penalty phase the court-appointed defense expert 25 testified that sheriff's deputies interfered with his evaluation of Flanagan by limiting the amount 26 of time he had for the clinical interview and tests to just a few hours (24 AA 5785; 30 AA 7204, 27 Blaskey Aff. 4). Had trial counsel provided sufficient time for the evaluation or the sheriff's deputies not interfered, the expert would have been able to conduct a complete evaluation necessary to determine the nature, severity, and effect of the trauma Flanagan experienced. The State's interference with the expert interview with Flanagan deprived Flanagan of his rights to develop and present a defense, due process, and a reliable death sentencing process.

1 which included powerful anti-psychotic and other psychiatric medications, and his impaired 2 functioning and demeanor during trial, all indicated Flanagan's inability to competently attend to 3 the proceedings, cooperate with counsel, and testify effectively on his own behalf.

4 While being held in the Clark County Detention Center awaiting trial, Flanagan received 5 substantial doses of psychotropic medications in an attempt to treat his mental illness symptoms 6 and suicidal tendencies (29 AA 7082-7134.). Flanagan's deteriorating mental condition prior to 7 and during trial, coupled with the debilitating effects of the State-prescribed psychotropic 8 medications rendered him unable to assist and consult rationally with counsel at trial and 9 incapable of understanding the proceedings (30 AA 7148, Pike Aff. ¶11).

10 These facts give rise to several state and federal constitutional violations. First, Flanagan 11 is entitled to relief because he has established his incompetence at the time of trial. A criminal 12 defendant is mentally incompetent to stand trial if, as a result of a mental disorder or 13 developmental disability, he is unable to understand the nature of the criminal proceedings or to 14 assist counsel in the conduct of a defense in a rational manner. See Dusky v. U.S., 362 U.S. 402
15 (1960); Morales v. State, 992 P.2d 252, 254, 116 Nev. 19, 22 (2000); NRS 178.400. A 16 substantive incompetence claim does not require "a showing of error on the part of the trial 17 judge, or any other state actor." James v. Singletary, 957 F.2d 1562, 1572 (11th Cir. 1992).

18 Second, Flanagan was deprived of his constitutional rights when the trial court failed to 19 conduct an appropriate inquiry into his competence to stand trial. The U.S. Constitution imposes 20 a duty on a trial court to inquire sua sponte into competence where there is a reason to doubt it.
21 See Drope v. U.S., 420 U.S. 162, 181 (1975); Pate v. Robinson, 383 U.S. 375 (1966); see also 22 NRS 178.405. In Williams v. Warden, 91 Nev. 16, 17, 530 P.2d 761 (1974), this Court granted 23 habeas relief on the ground that "the record before the court contained sufficient evidence to 24 raise serious doubts about [defendant's] competency to stand trial." The record demonstrates 25 that Flanagan's flat affect, appearing in a fog, and inability to follow the proceedings were 26 apparent at trial (30 AA 7148, Pike Aff. ¶11). In the face of this evidence, the court's failure to 27 institute competency proceedings, or even raise the issue with counsel, violated Flanagan's

1 fundamental constitutional rights. See, e.g., Pate, 383 U.S. at 384; Cooper v. Oklahoma, 517 2 U.S. 348, 354 & n.4 (1996) (due process requires sua sponte inquiry).

3 Third, Flanagan was denied his state and federal constitutional rights because trial 4 counsel failed to alert the court of his deteriorating mental functioning and his inability to assist 5 counsel and understand the proceedings. Mr. Pike unreasonably and prejudicially failed to 6 request that the court inquire into Flanagan's competence to stand trial. Although aware of 7 Flanagan's mental difficulties, Mr. Pike never raised the issue (2 AA 266-11 AA 2707; 30 AA 8 7148, Pike Aff. ¶11). Had he done so, and had the court held a competency hearing, Flanagan 9 would have been found incompetent to stand trial.

10 Fourth, Flanagan's convictions and sentence of death are unconstitutional because he was 11 involuntarily medicated during his trial, which affected his cognitive functioning and his 12 appearance to the jury (29 AA 7082-7128). In Riggins v. Nevada, 504 U.S. 127 (1992), Justice 13 Kennedy wrote, "absent an extraordinary showing by the State, the Due Process Clause prohibits 14 prosecuting officials from administering involuntary doses of antipsychotic medicines for 15 purposes of rendering the accused competent for trial." Id. at 139 (Kennedy, J., concurring).
16 The Supreme Court clarified the Riggins standard in Sell v. U.S., 539 U.S. 166 (2003), holding 17 that a defendant has a liberty interest to be free from unwarranted intrusions on bodily integrity, 18 including the intrusion of unwanted or inappropriate anti-psychotic medication. Id. at 2183-84.
19 The administration of anti-psychotic medications is never sanctioned where it is not medically 20 appropriate, and the administration of involuntary medications may be considered under only the 21 most limited conditions, where (1) the treatment is medically appropriate; (2) the treatment must 22 be substantially unlikely to have side effects that undermine the trial's fairness; (3) no less 23 intrusive alternatives are available; and, (4) important governmental interests are at stake. Id. at 24 2184-85. The State's involuntary medication of Flanagan met no part of this four-part test.

25 The prejudice from these constitutional violations is clear. Flanagan was forced to stand 26 trial while incompetent, a per se violation of the Constitution, requiring relief. Flanagan's 27 prosecution, conviction, and sentencing, while incompetent, were prejudicial per se. Medina v.

1 California, 505 U.S. 437, 448 (1992); Pate, 383 U.S. at 378. Moreover, the prejudicial effect of 2 forced medication impeded his ability to assist and cooperate with counsel, rendered him 3 incompetent, and precluded the jury from observing Flanagan in his actual, undrugged state. The 4 prejudice to a capital defendant from being administered antipsychotic drugs “can be acute 5 during the sentencing phase of the proceedings, when the sentencer must attempt to know the 6 heart and mind of the offender and judge his character, his contrition or its absence, and his 7 future dangerousness.” Riggins, 504 U.S. at 144.

8 Rather than recognize the importance of these constitutional claims, the District Court 9 denied relief without affording Flanagan the opportunity to discover additional information, 10 funds necessary to employ experts, and an evidentiary hearing to develop the full extent of his 11 lack of competence. At the very least, the District Court’s failure to permit factual development 12 of this claim and to conduct an evidentiary hearing requires a remand.³⁴

13 Claim 6

14 Flanagan’s conviction and death sentence are invalid under state and federal 15 constitutional guarantees of due process, equal protection, trial before an impartial jury and a 16 reliable sentence because of the unfairly prejudicial atmosphere in which his trial took place and 17 the court’s failure to change the venue to a location where a fair trial would have been possible.

18 The record demonstrates that Flanagan’s trial and sentencing hearing in 1985 took place 19 in an unduly prejudicial atmosphere, saturated by media coverage that included commentary on 20 the “satanic” nature of the crimes, and with a jury biased by having been subjected to voir dire 21 questioning regarding such publicity.³⁵ Although Flanagan sought a change of venue to ensure a 22 ³⁴ In Doggett v. State, 91 Nev. 768, 542 P.2d 1066 (1975), this Court remanded for the “purpose 23 of affording [petitioner] an evidentiary hearing on the question of his mental competency [at the 24 time of trial].” Id. at 772. This Court remanded that case even after the District Court had 25 concluded that there was “no doubt in the mind of the [District Court] as to [petitioner’s] sanity 26 at the time of the homicide – and at trial.” Id. at 769. A remand is necessary because whenever 27 “factual allegations are made which, if true, could establish a right to relief, a convicted person must be allowed an evidentiary hearing on such issue, unless the available record repels such allegations.” Id. at 771; see also Bracy v. Gramley, 520 U.S. 899 (1997).

³⁵ 1 AA 3, 7-17, 233-36, 244-47a, 248-2551, 263; 3 AA 736-37, 744-45; 4 AA 916-17, 919, 922, 924, 929, 931, 933, 934, 936, 937, 939, 940; 5 AA 1027, 1029, 1031, 1032, 1034, 1035, 1038, 1040, 1107, 1111, 1113, 1146, 1148; 13 AA 3001-3002; 16 AA 3697-98.

1 fair and impartial jury (2 AA 388), the court erroneously refused to rule on the motion and 2 compounded the prejudice by failing to conduct voir dire in a manner constitutionally sufficient 3 to insure seating of an impartial jury. The court below incorrectly denied relief on this claim by 4 applying an incorrect legal standard (31 AA 7546) and by refusing Flanagan the opportunity to 5 conduct discovery of facts that would have demonstrated actual bias and prejudice of the jury 6 that convicted and sentenced him in 1985 (27 AA 6537; 30 AA 7282).

7 “The failure to accord an accused a fair hearing violates even the minimal standards of 8 due process.” Irvin v. Dowd, 366 U.S. 717, 722 (1961). To protect this important interest, 9 NRS 13.050 permits a change the location of a trial “when there is reasonable belief that an 10 impartial trial cannot be had therein.” It is well settled that “[t]he theory of our system is that the 11 conclusions to be reached in a case will be induced only by evidence and argument in open court, 12 and not by any outside influence, whether of private talk or public print.” Patterson v. Colorado, 13 205 U.S. 454, 462 (1907). A defendant is entitled to a change of venue “where there exists a 14 reasonable likelihood that prejudicial news prior to trial will prevent a fair trial,” Sheppard v.
15 Maxwell, 384 U.S. 333, 363 (1966). Moreover, “appellate tribunals have the duty to make an 16 independent evaluation of the circumstances,” Sheppard, 384 U.S. at 362, setting aside the trial 17 court’s findings of impartiality where prejudice is “manifest,” Irvin, 366 U.S. at 724.

18 In Kaplan v. State, 96 Nev. 798, 800, 618 P.2d 354, 356 (1980), this Court stated that 19 “[u]nder certain circumstances . . . prejudice will be presumed, i.e., where the influence of the 20 news media is so outrageous that it pervades the proceedings and utterly corrupts the trial 21 atmosphere.” The Court concluded that the court properly denied Kaplan’s change of venue 22 motion because all of the jurors eventually seated assured the court that they could render a fair 23 verdict based in the evidence presented in court. 96 Nev. at 801; Sonner v. State, 112 Nev. 1328, 24 1336, 930 P.2d 707 (1996) (Court has “upheld the denial of other motions for change of venue 25 based upon such assurances [of impartiality] even where pretrial publicity has been pervasive”).
26 Thus, the issue is whether the constitutional right to an impartial jury requires the trial court to 27 conduct voir dire of any jurors who have been exposed to prejudicial pretrial publicity in an

1 individual and sequestered manner. Here the trial court did not seek any final assurances after 2 the jurors were exposed to other venirepersons discussing prejudicial pretrial publicity, their 3 inability to be impartial, and their certainty of the defendants' guilt.

4 The media coverage focused heavily on the "satanic" nature of the killings and so-called 5 "witchcraft" of the defendants. Voir dire revealed that virtually all the jurors were aware of the 6 crimes and most had been exposed to news, television, or radio reports.³⁶ From the record, it 7 appears that most were deemed impartial merely on their word that they could be so. Several 8 were not able to answer definitively when first asked about their ability to remain impartial, and 9 only when pressed, in front of others, stated that they could (4 AA 917-18, 920, 921, 926, 930, 10 935; 5 AA 1108). These jurors were not questioned further by defense counsel or the court.³⁷ 11 Significantly, two prospective jurors had to be excused after their admissions in the presence of 12 the venire that they could not be impartial and believed the defendants were guilty (4 AA 924-13 27; 5 AA 1107-09).

14 Citing the extensive pretrial publicity, Flanagan's trial counsel filed a Motion for Change 15 of Venue on September 9, 1985, prior to voir dire (2 AA 388). The court did not rule on the 16 motion at that time, presumably because "the preferred procedure is to reserve ruling on a 17 pretrial motion to change venue until the jury panel is subjected to examination." Hanley v.
18 State, 80 Nev. 248, 250, 391 P.2d 865, 866 (1964). However, even after voir dire revealed that 19 many potential jurors had been exposed to extensive media coverage and two jurors made 20 prejudicial statements in front of the venire, the court failed to rule on the motion.

21 Defense counsel inexplicably and unreasonably failed to pursue or renew the motion or 22 otherwise protect Flanagan's rights. See Claim 4, supra. Defense counsel also failed to pursue 23 individual sequestered voir dire, which could have prevented prejudice to the remaining jurors

1031, 1032, 1034, 1035, 1038, 1040, 1107, 1111, 1146, 1148.

1 from these statements. Fundamental fairness required some procedure to avoid the risk of 2 prejudicial effects inherent in joint questioning on otherwise impartial jurors. 47 Am. Jur. 2d §
3 199 (2001). In light of the prejudicial publicity, questions to the jurors should have been asked 4 individually and sequestered, or at the least, the court should have issued a curative instruction to 5 the remaining jurors and re-questioned them to ensure that they remained impartial.

6 Claim 7

7 Flanagan's death sentence is invalid under state and federal constitutional guarantees of 8 due process, equal protection, the right to an impartial jury drawn from a fair cross section of the 9 community, and a reliable sentence due to his trial, conviction, and sentencing by an all-white 10 jury from which African Americans were systematically excluded and unrepresented. Moreover, 11 the failure of Flanagan's counsel to object to these constitutional violations deprived Flanagan of 12 his right to effective assistance of counsel. See Claim 4, supra.

13 The Sixth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution guarantee the selection of a petit jury 14 from a representative cross-section of the community. See, e.g., Duren v. Missouri, 439 U.S.
15 357 (1979); Taylor v. Louisiana, 419 U.S. 522 (1975). A prima facie violation of the cross-16 section requirement is established by a three-pronged test: (1) that the group alleged to be 17 excluded is a "distinctive" group in the community; (2) that the representation of this group in 18 venires from which juries are selected is not fair and reasonable in relation to the number of such 19 persons in the community; and (3) that this underrepresentation is due to systematic exclusion of 20 the group in the jury-selection process. Duren, 439 U.S. at 364; see also Evans v. Nevada, 112 21 Nev. 1172, 1186 (1996). This requirement applies regardless of the defendant's race, and 22 defendants have standing to challenge the exclusion of a distinctive group, regardless of whether 23 they are a member of the group. Duren, 439 U.S. at 359 n. 1.

24 According to the 1990 census, African Americans comprised approximately 8.3 percent 25 of the population of Clark County, Nevada, yet there were no African Americans present in the 26 jury pool for any of Flanagan's trials. A prima facie case of systematic under-representation is 27 established because an all-white jury and an all-white venire in a community where 8.3 percent

1 of the population is African American is not representative of the community as a whole.
2 Flanagan offered evidence below that the computer program used to select jury pools in Clark
3 County does not create randomly generated lists. As a result, the lists do not contain a fair cross-
4 section of the community and systematically discriminate on the basis of race. The District 5 Court erred by denying Flanagan's motions for discovery and an evidentiary hearing on this 6 issue, which are necessary in order for Flanagan to further substantiate his claims.

7 Claim 8

8 Flanagan's conviction and death sentence are invalid under state and federal 9 constitutional guarantees of due process, equal protection, and trial before an impartial jury 10 because counsel for Flanagan was forced to agree with counsel for the co-defendants on the 11 exercise of a limited number of peremptory challenges to prospective jurors despite the fact that 12 they could not agree on which jurors to challenge peremptorily and had conflicting interests.

13 The trial court failed to ensure that Flanagan could freely exercise his peremptory 14 challenges. Rather, the court required the defendants to agree upon the jurors against whom 15 eight peremptory challenges would be exercised (5 AA 1136).³⁸ Counsel agreed on seven 16 peremptory challenges, but disagreed on the final juror to be challenged (Id. 1135-36).
17 Flanagan's counsel had "strong tactical reasons" for wanting a former parole officer on the jury 18 (Id.). Because of the court's ruling, however, counsel was forced to accede to other counsel and 19 the final peremptory challenge be used on a former parole officer³⁹ (Id. 1136-37).

20 A denial of the full complement of peremptory challenges violates NRS 175.051. See 21 Morales, 992 P.2d at 253. By depriving Flanagan of his final challenge, the court committed

23 ³⁸ In 1985, Nevada law guaranteed criminal defendants in capital cases the right to exercise 24 eight peremptory challenges. NRS 175.051. However, in cases with multiple defendants, all 25 defendants must agree in the exercise of such challenges. See NRS 175.041; Doyle v. State, 82 26 Nev. 242, 415 P.2d 323 (1966). This Court has rejected constitutional challenges to the 27 unanimity requirement in Anderson v. State, 81 Nev. 477, 480, 406 P.2d 532 (1965), but Flanagan urges this Court to reconsider the issue in light of the arguments presented here.

³⁹ To the extent that defense counsel failed to exercise independent judgment in determining whether to exercise the final peremptory challenge, Flanagan was deprived of his federal constitutional right to effective assistance of counsel guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment.

1 reversible error. An infringement on a defendant's rights pursuant to § 175.051 constitutes per 2 se error. Id. at 253; U.S. v. Brooklier, 685 F.2d 1208, 1223 (9th Cir. 1982). At the very least, 3 the court should have granted the defense an additional peremptory to ensure selection of a fair
4 and representative jury. See U.S. v. McClendon, 782 F.2d 785, 787 (9th Cir. 1986).⁴⁰

5 Claim 9

6 Flanagan's conviction is invalid under state and federal constitutional guarantees of due 7 process, equal protection, a public trial, the effective assistance of counsel, and a reliable 8 sentence because the trial judge directed that defense objections and motions be made directly to 9 the court reporter, rather than to the judge, and outside the presence of the jury and Flanagan.

10 During the 1985 trial, Judge Mosley required defense counsel to make objections and 11 motions during recesses to the court reporter, not in open court and not in the presence of the 12 judge, jury, or Flanagan (6 AA 1234-36; 8 AA 1895; 9 AA 2215). Defense counsel were not 13 allowed to make objections contemporaneous with the testimony or event at issue, but instead 14 were required to communicate those objections off the record directly to the court reporter at a 15 break in the proceedings. The trial court did not make rulings on the defense objections and 16 motions made in this manner (8 AA 1895-96; 9 AA 2114-16, 2215). In fact, by instituting this 17 bizarre procedure, the judge indicated that he intended to deny all defense objections and 18 motions. By contrast, the State was not required to follow this procedure on any issue, but rather 19 was allowed to make timely objections on the record, before the jury, and obtain a ruling. The 20 court failed to articulate any reasons for requiring the defendants to follow this objection 21 procedure, and no such reasons exist (6 AA 1234-36; 8 AA 1895-96; 9 AA 2114-16, 2215).

22 The objection procedure prejudiced Flanagan, and that prejudice was not neutralized by 23 the trial judge because he did not rule on the defense objections and motions in open court or 24 ⁴⁰ The District Court's failure to enforce state law also violated federal Due Process. See U.S. v.

25 Martinez-Salazar, 146 F.3d 653, 658 (9th Cir. 1998) ('[D]ue process would be violated if a trial 26 court permitted a defendant to exercise fewer than the number of peremptory challenges 27 authorized by law."). The right to peremptory challenges is a state-created liberty interest protected by the Constitution. A state's failure "to abide by its own statutory commands may implicate a liberty interest protected by the Fourteenth Amendment against arbitrary deprivation by a state." Fetterly v. Paskett, 997 F.2d 1295, 1300 (9th Cir. 1993).

1 otherwise address defense objections when the subject of those objections was before the jury.
2 Flanagan also was deprived of due process and his right to trial before an impartial tribunal 3 because the trial judge pre-judged certain defense objections and motions instead of considering 4 and ruling upon each objection and motion in turn.

5 The objection procedure imposed by the trial judge improperly established a trial 6 structure in which defense counsel could not prevent inadmissible evidence from being 7 suggested to the jury at the time any such evidence was presented, or request timely instructions
8 to the jury to disregard or limit the consideration of evidence. See U.S. v. Galin, 222 F.3d 1123, 9 1127 (9th Cir. 2000). Furthermore, because only defense counsel were subject to that limitation, 10 the jury likely inferred not only that Flanagan had no meaningful defense to certain evidence, but 11 also that the presentation of the prosecution was entitled to more weight.⁴¹

12 These constitutional violations were prejudicial per se, creating the impression that the 13 lack of defense objections and motions indicated that there was no defense and eliminating 14 possible bases for reasonable doubt. Coupled with the judge's prejudging defense motions, 15 Flanagan's absence from critical proceedings, and Flanagan's inability to direct his counsel in 16 the conduct of his defense with respect to objections and motions, infected the entire conduct of 17 the trial, and thus constituted a structural defect in the trial not subject to harmless error analysis.

18 Claim 10

19 Flanagan's conviction and death sentence are invalid under state and federal 20 constitutional guarantees of due process, equal protection of the laws, effective assistance of 21 counsel and a reliable sentence because Flanagan was not afforded effective assistance of 22 counsel on appeal. See Evitts v. Lucey, 469 U.S. 387 (1985).

23 ⁴¹ Flanagan's absence from certain proceedings involving motions and objections made on his 24 behalf necessarily deprived him of the basic right to defend and to assist counsel (12 AA 2812; 25 18 AA 4375; 19 AA 4523; 25 AA 6036; 30 AA 7148, Pike Aff. ¶9). A criminal defendant is 26 entitled "to be present from the time the jury is impaneled until its discharge after rendering the 27 verdict." Shields v. U.S., 273 U.S. 583, 589 (1927); see also Kentucky v. Stincer, 482 U.S. 730, 745, (1987). The right of the accused to be present during all critical stages of a trial against him is "fundamental," U.S. v. Throckmorton, 87 F.3d 1069, 1072 (9th Cir. 1996), and derives from the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment and the Due Process Clauses of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments. Campbell v. Wood, 18 F.3d 662, 671 (9th Cir. 1994).

1 A. Conflicts of interest

2 As discussed above in Claim 4, the Clark County Public Defender's office successfully 3 moved to withdraw from representing Flanagan just days prior to the evidentiary hearing in the 4 first trial, due to the existence of a conflict of interest (2 AA 252). The nature of the conflict of 5 interest is not explained in the record, nor is there any indication that it was ever resolved.
6 Without a resolution, the ethical conflict must be presumed to continue to be in existence.
7 Nevertheless, the Clark County Public Defender's office represented Flanagan during the first 8 (13 AA 3048, 3064) and third (19 AA 4536) appeals. As discussed above, both the courts and 9 Flanagan's counsel were independently obligated to address and resolve this conflict. Notably, a 10 court's obligation to inquire about the existence of an ethical conflict when it knows or should 11 know that one exists applies equally to an appellate or reviewing court.

12 B. Failure to Assert All Issues

13 Flanagan's appellate counsel unreasonably failed to raise on appeal or to completely 14 assert all available arguments supporting constitutional issues. Specifically, Flanagan's counsel 15 failed to raise the issues asserted in this brief as Claims 1 through 3, 5 through 9, 11 through 27, 16 and 29 through 36 (13 AA 3064-3120, 3149-69). Failure to raise these issues is sufficiently 17 prejudicial to justify a finding that Flanagan was denied effective counsel on appeal and that his 18 conviction, therefore, should be reversed. See, e.g., Banks v. Reynolds, 54 F.3d 1508 (10th Cir.
19 1995) (failure to raise ineffective counsel claim when trial counsel had failed to challenge 20 prosecution's failure to disclose exculpatory material); U.S. v. Cook, 45 F.3d 388 (10th Cir.
21 1995) (failure to raise obvious conflict of interest issue).

22 Claim 11

23 Flanagan's conviction and death sentence are invalid under state and federal 24 constitutional guarantees of due process, equal protection, and a reliable sentence due to the 25 failure of this Court to conduct fair and adequate appellate review. This Court had a duty to 26 determine (a) whether the evidence supports aggravating circumstances; (b) whether the sentence 27 of death was imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice, or any arbitrary factor; and (c)

1 whether the death sentence is excessive considering the crime and the defendant. NRS 177.055.
2 Such review was also required by the Constitution to ensure the fairness and reliability of the 3 death sentence. This Court has rejected these arguments in Evans v. State, 28 P.3d 498 (2001), 4 but Flanagan urges this Court to revisit the issue.

5 Claim 12

6 Flanagan's conviction and death sentence are invalid under state and federal 7 constitutional guarantees of due process, equal protection, trial before an impartial jury and a 8 reliable sentence because the trial court failed to instruct the jury during the guilt and penalty 9 trials concerning reasonable doubt, thereby lessening the State's burden of proof.

10 A. Reasonable Doubt Jury Instruction

11 Jury instruction number 35, given in accordance with NRS 175.211, unconstitutionally 12 lessened the State's burden of proof. Its principal defect is the analogy in the second sentence 13 between reasonable doubt and "doubt as would govern or control a person in the more weighty 14 affairs of life." (12 AA 2743.) This inappropriate analogy, combined with the instruction's 15 requirement that reasonable doubt "be actual and substantial," constitutes reversible error.⁴² The 16 jury's findings are thus vitiated and its verdict should be vacated. See Harmon v. Marshall, 69 17 F.3d 963, 965 (9th Cir. 1995) (constitutionally deficient reasonable doubt instruction "vitiates all 18 of the jury's findings."). This Court has upheld the definition of reasonable doubt in NRS 19 175.211. See, e.g., Bollinger v. State, 111 Nev. 1110, 1114, 901 P.2d 671, 674 (1995). The 20 Court, however, has called on the Legislature to discontinue the instruction, thus indicating its 21 constitutional infirmity. Bollinger, 111 Nev. at 1115, n.2. Because the standard of reasonable 22 doubt in NRS 175.211 is unconstitutional, the verdict in Flanagan's case must be vacated.⁴³

23 ⁴² See, e.g., Cage v. Louisiana, 498 U.S. 39 (1990) (per curiam) (reasonable doubt instruction 24 containing terms "grave uncertainty," "actual substantial doubt" and "moral certainty" 25 constitutes reversible error); Victor v. Nebraska, 511 U.S. 1, 41 (1994) ("the words 'substantial' and 'grave,' as they are commonly understood, suggest a higher degree of doubt than is required for acquittal under the reasonable doubt standard.").

26 ⁴³ In Ramirez v. Hatcher, 136 F.3d 1209, 1213-14 (9th Cir. 1998), the Ninth Circuit discussed 27 the problems inherent in this instruction, but concluded that, in light of the entire instructions given in that case, the charge was not unconstitutional. In contrast, the argument and instructions, taken as a whole, did not alleviate the infirmity of this reasonable doubt instruction.

1 B. Premeditation and Deliberation Instruction

2 The conviction and death sentence are invalid under federal and state constitutional 3 guarantees of due process, equal protection, trial before an impartial jury, and a reliable sentence 4 because the trial court improperly instructed the jury concerning the meaning of “premeditation 5 and deliberation” and because the court imposed an unconstitutional mandatory presumption of 6 malice (12 AA 2726, 2734).

7 The jury instruction on the meaning of “deliberation and premeditation” created a 8 likelihood that the jury convicted Flanagan of first degree murder, rather than second degree 9 murder, because of inadequate explanation of the distinction between the two offenses. The 10 same instruction was held to be an inadequate definition of “premeditation and deliberation” 11 because it blurred the distinction between first and second degree murder. Byford v. State, 116
12 Nev. 215, 994 P.2d 700, 713-14 (2000).⁴⁴

13 Furthermore, the “implied malice” instruction pursuant to NRS 200.020(2) created a 14 mandatory and unconstitutional presumption. Jury instruction number 17 improperly shifted the 15 State’s burden of proof to Flanagan by requiring that “[m]alice shall be implied” (emphasis 16 added) (12 AA 2725). This Court has recognized the possibility that the instruction raises the 17 issue of mandatory presumption. Cordova v. State, 116 Nev. 664, 6 P.3d 481, 483 (2000)
18 (indicating that the use of “may,” rather than “shall,” is preferable). Such mandatory 19 presumptions are unconstitutional because of their “tendency to shift the burden of proof on 20 malice from the prosecution to [the accused].” Yates v. Evatt, 500 U.S. 391, 402 (1991); see 21 also Sandstrom v. Montana, 442 U.S. 510, 513 (1979) (presumption that “a person intends the

23 ⁴⁴ Byford should be applied retroactively to the jury instruction given at Flanagan’s trial because 24 it ruled on an issue of substantive, rather than procedural, law. This Court’s decisions holding 25 that Byford does not apply retroactively are erroneous and should be overruled. See, e.g., Garner 26 v. State, 116 Nev. 770, 6 P.3d 1013, 1024-25 (2000); Leonard v. State, 117 Nev. 53, 17 P.3d 27 397, 410 (2001). When a court decides the meaning of a criminal statute, its ruling is one of substantive law that is to be applied retroactively. Bousley v. U.S., 523 U.S. 614, 620-21 (1998).
Byford holds that first degree murder as provided in NRS 200.030(1) requires proof beyond a reasonable doubt separately as to each of the three elements of mens rea: willfulness, deliberation, and premeditation. Because it announces a rule of substantive law that must be applied retroactively. Thus Byford requires vacation of Flanagan’s conviction and sentence.

1 ordinary consequences of his voluntary acts” violated the Due Process Clause); Francis v.
2 Franklin, 471 U.S. 307, 316 (1985) (presumption that a person intends “the natural and probable 3 consequences of his acts” unconstitutional). The “implied malice” instruction here similarly 4 constitutes reversible error, requiring vacation of the conviction and sentence.

5 C. Premeditation and Deliberation Instruction

6 Similarly, instruction number 47 requiring the jury to provide “equal and exact justice 7 between the defendant and the State of Nevada” improperly quantified the proportion of 8 “justice” to be allocated between Flanagan and the State and created a reasonable likelihood that 9 the conviction and sentence were based on a lesser and unconstitutional standard of proof (12 10 AA 2755). Although this Court has upheld this instruction in Leonard v. State, 114 Nev. 1196, 11 1209, 969 P.2d 288, 296 (1998), Flanagan nevertheless urges this Court to revisit that holding.

12 Instruction number 36 stated: “You are not called upon to return a verdict as to the guilt 13 or innocence of any other person.” (12 AA 2744). This instruction created a reasonable 14 likelihood that the jury would not properly apply the presumption of innocence in favor of 15 Flanagan, and would thus convict and sentence based on a lesser standard of proof than 16 constitutionally required. Although this Court apparently upheld the instruction in Guy v. State, 17 108 Nev. 770, 778, 839 P.2d 578, 583 (1992), without a discussion of the particular claim raised 18 by the appellant, Flanagan urges this Court to reverse its prior holding.

19 The instructional errors identified above had a substantial and injurious effect or 20 influence on the jury’s verdict at the guilt phase of Flanagan’s trial. See Evans, 28 P.3d at 524
21 (2001) (“The cumulative effect of multiple errors may violate a defendant’s constitutional right 22 to a fair trial even though errors are harmless individually.”); see also Byford, 994 P.2d at 717.
23 The verdict and sentence are therefore unreliable and should be vacated.⁴⁵

25 ⁴⁵ Failure to challenge these instructions earlier constitutes ineffective counsel under Strickland, 26 466 U.S. at 694. If counsel had effectively responded to these errors, there was a reasonable 27 probability that he would not have been convicted of first-degree murder. See Evans, 28 P.3d at 524. The conviction and sentence resulting from such deficient and prejudicial representation deprived Flanagan of his Sixth Amendment rights and should be vacated. See Claim 4, supra.

1 Claim 13

2 Flanagan's death sentence is invalid under state and federal constitutional guarantees of 3 due process, equal protection, and a reliable sentence, because the finding of the aggravating 4 circumstance that the killing was committed by someone who "knowingly created a great risk of 5 death to more than one person by means of a weapon, device or course of action that would 6 normally be hazardous to the lives of more than one person" is invalid.⁴⁶

7 In each of Flanagan's penalty hearings, the jury found as an aggravating factor that the 8 killing was committed by someone who "knowingly created a great risk of death to more than 9 one person by means of a weapon, device or course of action that would normally be hazardous 10 to the lives of more than one person." (13 AA 2983; 17 AA 4089; 25 AA 5972). This factor is 11 unsupported by sufficient evidence and its application violates Flanagan's constitutional rights.

12 Flanagan is entitled to a narrow construction of this factor. Where a criminal statute is 13 ambiguous, the statute must be construed in favor of the defendant. Rewis v. U.S., 401 U.S. 808, 14 812 (1971) ("ambiguity concerning the ambit of criminal statutes should be resolved in favor of 15 lenity"). Aggravating factors, which are essential to the constitutionality of any death penalty 16 scheme, must "genuinely narrow the class of death-eligible persons" in a way that reasonably 17 "justifies the imposition of a more severe sentence on the defendant compared to others found 18 guilty of murder." Zant v. Stephens, 462 U.S. 862, 877 (1983); see Lewis v. Jeffers, 497 U.S.
19 764, 774 (1990) (aggravating circumstances must permit the sentencer to make a "principled 20 distinction between those who deserve the death penalty and those who do not").⁴⁷

21 This Court has recognized that the "course of action" language of this aggravating factor

22 ⁴⁶ To the extent these challenges were not properly raised in prior proceedings, that failure 23 constitutes ineffective assistance of counsel, thus depriving Flanagan of his Sixth Amendment rights and his conviction and sentence should therefore be vacated.

24 ⁴⁷ See also Richmond v. Lewis, 506 U.S. 40, 46 (1992) ("a statutory aggravating factor is 25 unconstitutionally vague if it fails to furnish principled guidance for the choice between death 26 and a lesser penalty"); Clemons v. Mississippi, 494 U.S. 738, 758 (1990) (invalid circumstance 27 provided "no principled way to distinguish the case in which the death penalty is imposed, from the many cases in which it was not"); Maynard v. Cartwright, 486 U.S. 356 (1988) ("[t]he construction or application of an aggravating circumstance is unconstitutionally broad or vague if it does not channel or limit the sentencer's discretion in imposing the death penalty").

1 is ambiguous and, in some cases, has adopted a construction of NRS 200.033(3) that confines its 2 reach to singular events that endanger many people.⁴⁸ In Jimenez, the Court reasoned that the 3 aggravator did not apply to successive stabbing because “[u]nder such a scenario, even a rock 4 could have been used to kill both victims and thus improperly claimed to constitute a basis for 5 aggravating circumstance under NRS 200.033(3).” 105 Nev. at 342. Jimenez properly identified 6 an essential element of this aggravating factor: “Our cases reflect the view that the employment 7 of a weapon, device or course of action that is intrinsically hazardous to more than one life is a 8 necessary predicate to a finding under NRS 200.033(3).” Id. Under Nevada law, firing a gun at 9 a single intended victim is not intrinsically hazardous to more than one life. Moran, 103 Nev.
10 138. In fact, this Court has held that the firing of a gun at multiple victims does not satisfy 11 NRS 200.033(3) if the shots were separate and discrete acts. Lane, 114 Nev. at 305.

12 Under the interpretation of “course of action” espoused in Lane, Jimenez, and Moran, the 13 “great risk of death” aggravating circumstance is not present in this case. Flanagan was alleged 14 to have fired a weapon at one victim at a distance of less than three feet. There is no evidence 15 that Flanagan fired at the other victim, who was upstairs when Flanagan allegedly fired his 16 weapon. Flanagan’s discrete act, as in Lane and Moran, endangered only one victim. Thus, any 17 application of NRS 200.033(3) in this case denies Flanagan equal protection and a sufficiently 18 narrow capital sentencing scheme as guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution.

19 In addition, a finding of the aggravator in this case unconstitutionally broadens 20 NRS 200.033(3) by reading “knowingly create a great risk of death” out of the statute. In 21 Flanagan V., 112 Nev. at 1421, this Court relied on Hogan v. State, 103 Nev. 21, 24-25, 732 P.2d 22 422, 424 (1987) (aggravator includes a course of action “consisting of two intentional shootings 23 closely related in time and place”), to find sufficient evidence for the aggravator in Flanagan’s 24 ⁴⁸ See, e.g., Lane v. State, 114 Nev. 299, 956 P.2d 88 (1998) (shooting “spree” did not constitute 25 “course of action” sufficient to satisfy NRS 200.033(3) where defendant shot three individuals at 26 different locations in the span of an hour); Jimenez v. State, 105 Nev. 337, 775 P.2d 694 (1989) 27 (successive stabbing of two persons in the same room by a single defendant was not a course of action that would normally be hazardous to the lives of more than one person); Moran v. State, 103 Nev. 138, 734 P.2d 712 (1987) (aggravator did not apply where defendant’s shooting of victim placed no other persons in apartment or neighbors within immediate risk of death).

1 case. The Hogan approach, however, is only appropriate where the defendant's course of action
2 actually consists of two intentional shootings. Otherwise, the Hogan approach ignores the plain 3 language of the statute requiring "great risk of death" to a second person. Flanagan's alleged 4 course of action consisted of shooting a single victim without actual risk to any other person, and 5 a finding of the aggravator in his case contravenes the plain language of the statute.

6 Because Nevada is a weighing state, the error resulting from inclusion of an invalid 7 aggravating factor demands reversal where the courts have not afforded Flanagan a new 8 sentencing proceeding or re-weighing or other correction under applicable state procedures.
9 Jimenez, 105 Nev. at 343. Flanagan was denied the constitutional right to a fundamentally fair 10 sentencing proceeding and to a reliable sentence.

11 Claim 14

12 Flanagan's death sentence is invalid under state and federal constitutional guarantees of 13 due process, equal protection, and a reliable sentence, because the finding of the aggravating 14 circumstance that the killing was committed "in the commission of a burglary" (13 AA 2976) is 15 unconstitutionally vague and applies to all killings that occur indoors. Thus, the aggravating 16 factor fails to sufficiently narrow the category of murders eligible for a death sentence. See, e.g., 17 Zant, 462 U.S. at 877; Maynard, 486 U.S. at 361. In addition, trial and appellate counsel were 18 ineffective for failing to present this issue. This Court has rejected these arguments in analogous 19 cases. E.g., Bennett v. State, 106 Nev. 135, 787 P.2d 797 (1990). Flanagan, however, 20 respectfully submits that this Court should revisit this issue.

21 Claim 15

22 Flanagan's death sentence is invalid under state and federal constitutional guarantees of 23 due process, equal protection, and a reliable sentence, because the finding of the aggravating 24 circumstance that the killing was committed "in the commission of a robbery" (13 AA 2976) is 25 unconstitutionally vague and requires no connection between the robbery and the killing.
26 Indeed, the facts here demonstrate that the killings did not occur during the course of a robbery; 27 the perpetrators did not formulate any intent to commit a robbery, did not kill in furtherance of a

1 robbery, and retrieved items from the Gordon home after the killings only as a pretext. In 2 addition, trial and appellate counsel were ineffective for failing to present this issue. Although 3 this Court has rejected these arguments, see Bennett, 106 Nev. 135, Flanagan respectfully 4 submits that this Court should revisit this issue on the authority cited in Claim 14.

5 Claim 16

6 Flanagan's death sentence is invalid under state and federal constitutional guarantees of 7 due process, equal protection, the prohibition against double jeopardy, and a reliable sentence 8 due to the state's use of the same felony charges both to support his conviction on a felony 9 murder theory and to support one of the aggravating factors. The duplicative use of the felonies 10 as the basis for capital murder (12 AA 2726) and as independent factors for imposing a death 11 sentence (13 AA 2976), together with the prosecutor's argument (see Claim 1), violated 12 Flanagan's right to a reliable penalty determination in violation of the Eighth and Fourteenth 13 Amendments to the Constitution. See, e.g., Caldwell v. Mississippi, 472 U.S. 320, 341 (1985).

14 In McConnell v. State, 102 P.3d 606 (2004), this Court explicitly recognized the 15 constitutional infirmity of the State's duplicative use of felonies as the basis for capital murder 16 and as the bases to warrant a death sentence. This Court concluded that "the felony aggravator 17 fails to genuinely narrow the death eligibility of felony murderers and reasonably justify 18 imposing death on all defendants to whom it applies."). Id. As in McConnell, the remedy for 19 such a violation is to vacate Flanagan's death sentence.

20 Claim 17

21 Flanagan's death sentence is invalid under state and federal constitutional guarantees of 22 due process, equal protection, and a reliable sentence because of the trial court's failure to 23 properly instruct the jury during the sentencing hearing, and counsel's failure to properly raise 24 them constitutes ineffective assistance of counsel.

25 A. The Anti-Sympathy Instruction

26 The jury was instructed during each sentencing hearing that "[a] verdict may never be 27 influenced by sympathy, prejudice or public opinion. Your decision should be the product of

1 sincere judgment and sound discretion in accordance with these rules of law” (12 AA 2751; 13
2 AA 2980; 17 AA 4084; 25 AA 5961).

3 This instruction forbade the jury from taking sympathy into account and violates the 4 constitutional mandate that all mitigating evidence be considered. See, e.g., Eddings v.
5 Oklahoma, 455 U.S. 104, 110 (1982) (“[T]he Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments require that 6 the sentencer . . . not be precluded from considering, as a mitigating factor, any aspect of a 7 defendant’s character . . . that the defendant proffers as a basis for a sentence less than death.”)
8 (quoting Lockett v. Ohio, 438 U.S. 586, 604 (1978)). By precluding the jury from considering 9 evidence concerning Flanagan’s character and background, this instruction denied him the 10 individualized sentencing determination the Constitution requires. Lockett, 438 U.S. at 604.

11 This instruction did not appropriately limit its prohibition, but rather precluded 12 consideration of all sympathy. The Supreme Court has held that an instruction that the jury was 13 not to rely on “mere sympathy” struck a balance between the need for sentencers to consider all 14 relevant mitigating evidence and impermissible, unfettered discretion. California v. Brown, 479
15 U.S. at 544 (O’Connor, J., concurring). The Court relied on the qualification of “mere” when it 16 upheld the instruction as not violating the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments. “We think a 17 reasonable juror would reject [an impermissible] interpretation, and instead understand the 18 instruction not to rely on ‘mere sympathy’ as a directive to ignore only the sort of sympathy that 19 would be totally divorced from the evidence adduced during the penalty phase.” Id. at 542.

20 In contrast, the jury here was instructed to never consider sympathy. It is reasonably 21 likely that the jury understood the instruction to mean that when making a moral judgment about 22 his culpability, it was forbidden to consider any evidence that evoked a sympathetic response and 23 thus, the instruction violated the Constitution. Eddings, 455 U.S. at 105 (“The sentencer . . . may 24 determine the weight to be given relevant mitigating evidence but may not give it no weight by 25 excluding it from their consideration.”). The giving of the unconstitutional “anti-sympathy” 26 instruction substantially and injuriously affected the process to such an extent as to render 27 Flanagan’s sentence fundamentally unfair and unconstitutional. The State accordingly cannot

1 show beyond a reasonable doubt that this instruction did not affect the sentence.⁴⁹

2 B. Failure to Instruct as to Lack of Unanimity Requirement for Mitigating 3 Circumstances.

4 The instructions impermissibly suggested unanimity was required in considering 5 mitigating circumstances, thus preventing the jury from considering all constitutionally relevant 6 evidence. The instructions given to Flanagan's sentencing juries in 1985 and 1989 directed that 7 a death sentence was permissible if the jury "finds . . . there are no mitigating circumstances 8 sufficient to outweigh the aggravating circumstances found." (13 AA 2973; 17 AA 4075). The 9 juries were also instructed that "[y]our verdicts must be unanimous. When you have agreed 10 upon your verdicts, they should be signed and dated by your foreman." (13 AA 2982; 17 AA 11 4086). The juries were also instructed that "[i]t will be the jury's duty to select one appropriate 12 verdict pertaining to the punishment which is to be imposed and one appropriate special verdict 13 pertaining to the jury's findings with respect to aggravating and mitigating circumstances." (13 14 AA 2981; 17 AA 4085, emphasis added).

15 The instructions failed to advise that a mitigating circumstance could be considered by 16 individual jurors in determining the appropriate penalty regardless of what the other jurors 17 thought about the existence of that circumstance. Because the jury received no instruction that 18 verdicts regarding mitigating circumstances differed from the verdict on ultimate punishment, 19 the jury would have had to disregard the instruction that the "verdict be unanimous" to properly 20 complete the special verdict regarding mitigating factors (13 AA 2982; 17 AA 4086). The 21 prosecutor's argument reinforced the idea that the same deliberative and unanimity processes 22 applied to mitigating and aggravating factors. The prosecutor explained that it was the jury's 23 "duty to determine (a) whether an aggravating circumstance is found to exist . . . The next thing

25 ⁴⁹ This Court has previously upheld this instruction when an anti-sympathy instruction was 26 coupled with instructions that fully advised the jury of the range of mitigating circumstances to 27 consider. See, e.g., Leonard, 117 Nev. 53. In this case, however, the instructions regarding mitigating factors impermissibly suggested that unanimity was required for mitigating circumstances. As a result, the jury was not properly instructed on the range of mitigating circumstances to be considered.

1 is (b), whether a mitigating circumstance or circumstances are found to exist. You do exactly the 2 same thing with the mitigating circumstances that defense counsel will tell you about.” (17 AA
3 4104). No instruction was given instructing the jury what to do if some but not all considered a 4 factor regarding Flanagan’s background or character as a mitigating factor.⁵⁰ It is reasonably 5 likely that the jurors in this case believed they were precluded from considering any mitigating 6 evidence unless they all agreed on a particular mitigating circumstance.

7 By permitting a single juror to block consideration of a mitigating factor and 8 consequently require the jury to impose the death penalty, the instructions taken as a whole, 9 established an arbitrary and capricious capital punishment scheme. See McKoy v. North 10 Carolina, 494 U.S. at 438. Such a “freakish” scheme violated Flanagan’s constitutional right to a 11 reliable sentencing determination. See e.g., Franklin v. Lynaugh, 487 U.S. 164, 181 (1988); 12 Hollaway v. Nevada, 116 Nev. 732, 744 6 P.3d 987 (2000) (failure to instruct jurors about to 13 independently assess all mitigating evidence violates Eighth Amendment).

14 The failure to instruct the jury as to the lack of unanimity requirement for mitigating 15 circumstances substantially and injuriously affected the process to such an extent as to render 16 Flanagan’s sentence fundamentally unfair and unconstitutional. The State cannot show, beyond 17 a reasonable doubt, that this instructional error did not affect the sentence.⁵¹

18 C. Failure to Instruct as to Unanimity Requirement for Aggravating
19 Circumstances.

20 The juries in the 1985 and 1989 sentencing hearings were equally unguided regarding the 21 unanimity requirement in Nevada law for the finding of aggravating circumstances. See NRS

22 ⁵⁰ The prosecution’s argument distinguishes this case from Jimenez, 112 Nev. 610. In Jimenez, 23 this Court upheld instructions that were silent regarding mitigating factors because the jury was 24 not constrained to unanimity through the instruction and “of course the State did not make the mistake of suggesting a requirement of unanimity regarding evidence in mitigation.” Id. at 624.

25 ⁵¹ The constitutional deficiencies of sentencing instructions in 1985 and 1989 were not cured by 26 more explicit instructions in 1995 regarding individual rather than unanimous consideration of 27 mitigating factors. See note 14, supra. The 1995 penalty hearing would not have been necessary if the 1985 or 1989 hearings had been conducted in accordance with constitutional requirements.
Moreover, the errors in the 1985 and 1989 hearings may have prevented Flanagan’s only opportunity to receive a sentence other than death.

1 175.554(2). The jury instructions failed to specify that the jurors were required to unanimously
2 agree as to the existence of aggravating circumstances. Instead, the instructions merely stated 3 that "[t]he burden rests upon the prosecution to establish any aggravating circumstance beyond a 4 reasonable doubt" (13 AA 2974; 17 AA 4078), and that the jury's ultimate "verdict" must be 5 "unanimous" (13 AA 2982; 17 AA 4086).

6 By failing to require jury unanimity as to aggravating factors, the instructions violated 7 Flanagan's constitutional right to a jury determination of his eligibility for an enhanced sentence 8 and a reliable capital sentencing determination. "A properly instructed jury is imperative in the 9 capital sentencing process." Geary v. State, 114 Nev. 100, 952 P.2d 431 (1998) (quoting Geary 10 v. State, 112 Nev. 1434, 1449, 930 P.2d 719 (1996)). A capital jury must be instructed that the 11 presence of an aggravating circumstance must be found unanimously. Geary, 114 Nev. at 105.
12 The absence of an express instruction as to the need for unanimity for aggravating circumstances 13 rendered Flanagan's sentence fundamentally unfair and unconstitutional. The State cannot show, 14 beyond a reasonable doubt, that the lack of a unanimity instruction did not affect the sentence.

15 D. Failure to Instruct that the Jury is Never Required to Impose a Death 16 Sentence.

17 Flanagan's sentencing juries were not instructed that they had unlimited discretion to 18 return a life sentence.⁵² The instructions thus failed to convey to the jury its discretion to impose 19 a life sentence under any and all circumstances, in violation of the constitutional guarantee to a 20 reliable sentencing determination. Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238 (1972).

21 This Court acknowledged in Bennett v. Nevada, 111 Nev. 1099, 901 P.2d 676 (1995), 22 that this instruction may be technically accurate, but still does not fully convey to the jurors their 23 ⁵² The instructions given to each of Flanagan's sentencing juries read:

24 The jury may impose a sentence of death only if it finds at least one aggravating 25 circumstance has been established beyond a reasonable doubt and further finds 26 there are no mitigating circumstances sufficient to outweigh the aggravating 27 circumstances found.

Otherwise, the punishment imposed shall be imprisonment in the State Prison for life with or without the possibility of parole. (13 AA 2973; 17 AA 4075;

1 ability to render a life sentence. This Court noted that the instruction accurately described the 2 jury's prerogative to decide if the defendant would live regardless of whether aggravating 3 circumstances outweighed mitigating circumstances but found no reason to withhold explicit 4 instructions that the jury still has the discretion to return a penalty other than death. Id. at 1109.
5 This Court instructed that the death penalty is only a sentencing option. Id. (emphasis in 6 original). "Because of the unique gravity of the death penalty, there is no sound reason why 7 juries should not be fully advised of their constitutional prerogatives with respect to capital 8 cases." Id. A jury that is not fully advised of its sentencing options is not accurately instructed.
9 U.S. Const. Amend. VIII; Nev. Const. Art I., §§ 3, 6, and 8; Nev. Const. Art. IV, § 21.

10 Although the instruction was upheld in Bennett, this Court later found a similar 11 instruction impermissibly misleading although the prosecutor told the jury that it is not required 12 to return death and other jury instructions explained that the weighing process is qualitative and 13 not quantitative. In Geary v. State, the instructions and argument served only confuse and "the 14 process by which the jury arrived at its verdict was irreversibly tainted." 112 Nev. at 1450.

15 In the instant case, the lack of instruction on the jury's scope of discretion is the same and 16 the irreversible taint is the same. Moreover, the error was compounded when the prosecutor told 17 the jury during argument that the imposition of the death penalty was the jury's "legal duty" and 18 "moral duty" in this case (12 AA 2881). It is virtually certain that Flanagan's jury understood 19 the instructions as requiring it to impose a death sentence whenever the aggravating 20 circumstances outweighed the mitigating circumstances. The jurors were led to believe they 21 were required to impose a death sentence unless they could articulate a mitigating circumstance 22 or other "reason" why the death penalty should not be imposed. This failure to adequately 23 instruct the jury rendered Flanagan's sentence fundamentally unfair and unconstitutional.⁵³ The

25 ⁵³ See, e.g., Boyde v. California, 494 U.S. 370, 381 (1990) (under the Eighth Amendment, 26 "[t]here is . . . a strong policy in favor of accurate determination of the appropriate penalty in a 27 capital case."); Graham v. Collins, 506 U.S. 461, 468 (1993) ("[S]tates must confer on the sentencer sufficient discretion to take account of the 'character and record of the individual offender and the circumstances of the particular offense' to ensure that 'death is the appropriate punishment in a specific case.'").

1 State accordingly cannot show beyond a reasonable doubt that the instruction did not affect the 2 conviction and sentence.

3 E. The Commutation Instruction

4 The jury was misled by the instruction that the State Board of Pardons Commissions has 5 the power to modify Flanagan's sentence.⁵⁴ The instruction inadequately stated the law as 6 applied to this case because it did not apprise the jury of how remote Flanagan's chances were of 7 ever benefiting from the possibility of executive clemency (see Claim 30). The instruction 8 violated the constitutional guarantees of due process of law and a reliable sentence. U.S. Const.
9 Amends. V, VII, XIV, Nev. Const. Art. 1, § 8; see also Thomas, 83 P.3d at 823-24 (granting 10 penalty phase relief because trial counsel failed to object to commutation instruction).

11 Instructing juries to consider commutation when deciding sentences has been rejected by 12 nearly every jurisdiction that has considered the question including Nevada. California v.
13 Ramos, 463 U.S. 992, 1025 (1983) (Marshall, J., dissenting); Sonner v. Nevada, 114 Nev. 321, 14 955 P.2d 673 (1998). The jury instruction here followed the language prescribed in Petrocelli v.
15 Nevada, 101 Nev. 46, 692 P.2d 503 (1985), that this Court later invalidated. Sonner, 114 Nev. at 16 327. The instruction was standardized in Petrocelli because this type of instruction was not 17 always "totally accurate or suitable." Petrocelli, 101 Nev. at 56. Ultimately, in Sonner, this 18 Court concluded that is best to eliminate that portion of the instruction regarding sentence 19 modification because the Pardons Board's powers have become more limited and the "possibility 20 that a jury can occasionally be misled" in some circumstances. Sonner, 114 Nev. at 327.

21 An instruction may provide accurate information on the Parole Board's authority, but still 22 be misleading when applied to the facts of the case. See, e.g., Geary, 112 Nev. 1434 (Petrocelli 23 instruction unconstitutionally applied given defendant's prior criminal conduct, alcohol abuse

24 ⁵⁴ In each sentencing hearing the jury was instructed in part as follows:

25 Although under certain circumstances and conditions the State Board of 26 Pardons Commissioners has the power to modify sentences, you are instructed 27 that you may not speculate as to whether the sentence you impose may be changed at a later date. (13 AA 2972, Instruction 5; 17 AA 4074, Instruction 5; 25 AA 5949, Instruction 5.)

1 and a failed parole that would most likely make him ineligible for parole); Gallego, 124 F.3d
2 1065 (instruction on Board of Pardon's ability to modify sentences violated Eighth Amendment 3 when defendant was ineligible for parole).

4 As applied to Flanagan, the Petrocelli instruction was misleading because if he had been 5 given a sentence of life without possibility of parole, Flanagan stood no possibility of ever being 6 released from prison. The Nevada Pardons Board has never commuted a sentence in a high 7 profile murder case such as this one. Even if Flanagan had been able to obtain a commutation of 8 the jury's first-degree murder sentence, he still would require commutations of the additional 9 sentences he received for the other convictions. Thus, although Flanagan has virtually no chance 10 of pardon, this reality was not conveyed to the jury. "The Due Process Clause does not allow the 11 execution of a person" on the basis of information which he had no opportunity to deny or 12 explain. Gardner v. Florida, 430, U.S. 349, 362 (1977). This failing was exacerbated by the 13 prosecutor's emphasis during closing argument on Flanagan's alleged future dangerousness, 14 which implied that he might get out of prison and back into society unless he was sentenced to 15 death. The prosecutor described the defendants as "night-stalking terrorists" and "moral 16 amputees" (24 AA 5887, 5897), and emphasized that society is "at the mercy of criminals" who 17 are not put to death (25 AA 5939). The prosecutor's argument unconstitutionally presented the 18 jury with the choice between finding itself "at the mercy" of Flanagan at a future time and 19 issuing a death sentence. Simmons v. South Carolina, 512 U.S. 154, 171 (1994) ("The State may 20 not create a false dilemma by advancing generalized arguments regarding the defendant's future 21 dangerousness while, at the same time preventing the jury from learning that the defendant never 22 will be released on parole."). A reasonable likelihood exists that the instruction prompted the 23 jury to make erroneous speculations about the sentence Flanagan might serve, and created a false 24 choice between sentencing to death or incarceration that eventually could lead to pardon.

25 F. Failure to Instruct the Sentencing Jury to Find the Elements Required for 26 Eligibility for Capital Murder Beyond a Reasonable Doubt.

27 Flanagan's death sentence is unconstitutional under the reliability guarantee of the Eighth

1 Amendment and under due process guarantee of the Fourteenth Amendment, because the jury
2 did not find the elements required for capital eligibility beyond a reasonable doubt. The factors 3 necessary to support eligibility for the death penalty in Nevada, in addition to conviction on all 4 the elements of first degree murder, are (1) the existence of one or more aggravating factors, and 5 (2) that the aggravating factors are not outweighed by the mitigation. Nev. Rev. Stat. § 6 200.030(4); Johnson v. State, 118 Nev. 787, 802-03, 59 P.3d 450 (2002). Those factors must be 7 proved to and found by a jury beyond a reasonable doubt.

8 Flanagan's juries were instructed that aggravating factors must be proved beyond a 9 reasonable doubt (13 AA 2974; 17 AA 4078). The juries, however, were not instructed that they 10 had to find that aggravation was not outweighed by mitigation beyond a reasonable doubt, or by 11 any standard at all, in order to find Flanagan eligible to receive the death penalty (12 AA 2708-12 55e; 13 AA 2968-82; 17 AA 4070-87; 25 AA 5945-65).

13 Although this Court previously rejected the argument that in cases in which the 14 aggravation and mitigation were evenly balanced, the jury could not impose a death sentence, 15 Ybarra v. State, 100 Nev. 167, 173-74, 679 P.2d 797 (1984), the law is now clear that every fact 16 necessary to imposition of an increased punishment must be proved to and found by a jury 17 beyond a reasonable doubt. Ring v. Arizona, 536 U.S. 584, 589, 609 (2002); Apprendi v. New 18 Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 483 (2000); Johnson, 118 Nev. at 802-03. Flanagan's sentence must be 19 reversed because the error is structural. Sullivan v. Louisiana, 508 U.S. 275, 281-82 (1993).

20 This rule must be applied to Flanagan, because the principle that elements of an offense 21 must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt is fully retroactive. In Cage v. Louisiana, the Court 22 emphasized the vital role of the reasonable doubt standard in avoiding convictions based on 23 factual error. 498 U.S. 39, 39-40 (1990); see also In re Winship, 397 U.S. 358, 364 (1970). The 24 Supreme Court has repeatedly recognized that the rules in Winship and Mullaney v. Wilbur, 421 25 U.S. 684 (1975), enhance accuracy. In Ivan V. v. City of New York, 407 U.S. 203, 205 (1972), 26 the Court gave the Winship rule retroactive effect, because "the major purpose of the 27 constitutional standard of proof beyond a reasonable doubt announced in Winship was to 1 overcome an aspect of a criminal trial that substantially impairs the truth-finding function.”

2 Subsequently, in Hankerson v. North Carolina, 432 U.S. 233, 240 (1977), the Court relied 3 applied Mullaney retroactively, because “the rule was designed to diminish the probability that 4 an innocent person would be convicted and thus to overcome an aspect of a criminal trial that 5 ‘substantially impairs the truth-finding function.’” Id. at 242.

6 The Supreme Court’s recent retroactivity analysis in Schriro v. Summerlin, 124 S.Ct.
7 2519 (2004), supports Flanagan’s position. In Schriro, where the Court considered whether the 8 Ring should be applied retroactively to cases on collateral review, the Court analyzed whether 9 the rule satisfied the test for exceptions to non-retroactivity enunciated in Teague v. Lane, 489
10 U.S. 288, 311 (1989) (plurality opn.), for “‘watershed rules of criminal procedure’ implicating 11 the fundamental fairness and accuracy of criminal proceedings,” Schriro, 124 S.Ct. at 2524 12 (quoting Saffle v. Parks, 494 U.S. 484, 495 (1990)), and establishing “bedrock procedural 13 elements essential to the fairness of a proceeding.” Sawyer, 497 U.S. at 242 (internal citation, 14 and emphasis omitted). The Court held that, while the right to jury trial was fundamental, the 15 evidence is “simply too equivocal” to establish that judicial factfinding “so ‘seriously 16 diminishe[s]’ accuracy” that it justifies retroactive application of Ring, Schriro, 124 S.Ct. at 17 2525, because there were equally compelling arguments favoring jury or judge sentencing.

18 With respect to the proof beyond a reasonable doubt standard, however, the rule is a 19 “bedrock procedural element” that increases accuracy, as Winship and its progeny demonstrates.
20 Accordingly, Schriro requires that the Apprendi rule, requiring that all elements of the capital 21 offense be found beyond a reasonable doubt, apply retroactively. U.S. v. Sanchez-Cervantes, 22 282 F.3d 664, 669 (9th Cir. 2002). This Court’s test of retroactivity is broader than the rule of 23 Teague and focuses on whether “accuracy is seriously diminished without the rule” Colwell 24 v. State, 118 Nev. 807, 59 P.3d 463 (2002); and since the rule of Apprendi and Ring, with 25 respect to the reasonable doubt standard, satisfies the Teague standard, it must also satisfy the 26 Colwell standard. As the instructions did not require the jury to find the weighing element of 27 capital eligibility beyond a reasonable doubt, the penalty judgment must be reversed.

1 Claim 18

2 Flanagan's sentence is invalid under state and federal constitutional guarantees of due 3 process of law, equal protection of the laws, an impartial jury and a reliable sentence because the 4 court refused to grant cause challenges against jurors who could not be impartial. During the 5 second penalty hearing, prospective juror Jordan unequivocally indicated that he was unable to 6 consider imposing a sentence less than death (14 AA 3247-48). The court denied Flanagan's 7 motion to have Mr. Jordan excused for cause (14 AA 3251-58), forcing him to use a peremptory 8 challenge (15 AA 3606). During the third penalty hearing, prospective juror Jacintho repeatedly 9 stated that he would impose death unless there were some overwhelming mitigating 10 circumstances, the nature of which were beyond his comprehension (19 AA 4662-63; 20 AA 11 4671-75). The court denied a motion to excuse Mr. Jacintho for cause (20 AA 4670, 4673).

12 Due Process requires excusing for cause prospective jurors who will automatically vote 13 for death regardless of aggravating or mitigating evidence. See Walker v. State, 113 Nev. 853, 14 866, 944 P.2d 762, 771 (1997); Morgan v. Illinois, 504 U.S. 719, 729 (1992). Given Mr.
15 Jordan's statements that death should be imposed in any intentional killing, he failed to meet 16 constitutional standards for impartiality. Similarly, Mr. Jacintho's inability to articulate any 17 scenario in which mitigation would warrant a sentence less than death disqualified him as a juror.

18 The loss of peremptory challenges resulting from an erroneous ruling on challenges for 19 cause is sufficient to establish prejudice. See Walker, 113 Nev. at 866. The loss of a peremptory 20 challenge was especially prejudicial during the second penalty hearing because Judge Mosley's 21 rulings impermissibly skewed the jury selection process.⁵⁵ Similarly, Flanagan was prejudiced

23 ⁵⁵ Judge Mosley, who was ultimately removed from the case because of bias against the 24 defendants (19 AA 4497-4501), used Mr. Jordan – the first juror questioned – to establish an 25 unreasonably high burden for excluding jurors. In denying the motion to remove Mr. Jordan, 26 Judge Mosley repeatedly exhibited disdain for removing biased jurors. In applying an unconstitutional standard, Judge Mosley forced Flanagan to use "one of the valuable [peremptory challenges] for a guy that is so obvious everyone in the courtroom knows he has to go" (14 AA 3297). Such disregard reflects the lack of fairness afforded to Flanagan.

27 The court's error with respect to Juror Jordan was not remedied by the third penalty hearing. See note 14, supra. The error cost Flanagan what could have been his only chance to avoid death, and a subsequent penalty hearing cannot cure such an error. See Beets v. State, 107 Nev. 957,

1 by the court's failure to remove Mr. Jacintho during the third trial.

2 Claim 19

3 Flanagan's death sentence is invalid under state and federal constitutional guarantees of 4 due process of law, equal protection of the laws, effective assistance of counsel, trial by an 5 impartial jury, and a reliable sentence due to the removal of a prospective juror based on her 6 views concerning the death penalty, even though those views could not have substantially 7 impaired that juror's ability to follow Nevada law. During the second penalty hearing, 8 prospective juror Anne Cassidy stated that she believed that "there are many, many things that 9 deserve the death penalty" and that she could impose a death sentence in connection with eleven 10 other jurors, although the decision would be difficult (14 AA 3294-95). Based upon this 11 questioning, the Court excluded Ms. Cassidy for cause (14 AA 3295). The removal of Ms.
12 Cassidy violated Flanagan's constitutional right to an impartial jury. The Sixth Amendment 13 prohibits the exclusion of venire members "simply because they voiced general objections to the 14 death penalty or expressed conscientious or religious scruples against its infliction."
15 Witherspoon v. Illinois, 391 U.S. 510, 522 (1968). A court may exclude a juror only when her 16 belief "prevents or substantially impairs members of this group from performing one of their 17 duties as jurors." Aesoph v. State, 102 Nev. 316, 319, 721 P.2d 379, 381 (1986).

18 Ms. Cassidy's responses indicated only general reservations as to the application of the 19 death penalty, not convictions so strong as to preclude her from following the law. In fact, Ms.
20 Cassidy stated she could impose a death sentence if the other jurors favored the death penalty 21 and she felt that the jurors were not biased (14 AA 3294-95). Ms. Cassidy's insistence on a 22 unanimous, unbiased jury comports with constitutional protections and does not provide 23 sufficient grounds for removal. The erroneous exclusion was prejudicial and requires relief from 24 the death sentence. See Gray v. Mississippi, 481 U.S. 648, 665 (1987).⁵⁶

26 961, 821 P.2d 1044, 1047 (1991) (discussing errors in capital sentencing by jury despite subsequent penalty hearing by three-judge panel).

27 ⁵⁶ Flanagan's third penalty hearing did not cure this error. See note 14, supra. By erroneously excluding Ms. Cassidy from the panel at his second penalty hearing, Flanagan lost what could

1 Claim 20

2 Flanagan's conviction and death sentence are invalid under state and federal 3 constitutional guarantees of due process, equal protection, a fair tribunal and a reliable sentence 4 due to the lack of an impartial tribunal. Flanagan was denied a fair trial and sentencing because 5 of judicial bias. A judge has a "duty of examining the facts for himself when if true as alleged 6 they make the trial absolutely void." Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U.S. 86, 92 (1923). The court 7 erroneously denied the judicial bias claim and the requests for discovery and a hearing.

8 "[W]here specific allegations before the court show reason to believe that the petitioner 9 may, if the facts are fully developed, be able to demonstrate that he is . . . entitled to relief, it is 10 the duty of the court to provide the necessary facilities and procedures for an adequate inquiry."
11 Bracy v. Gramley, 520 U.S. 899, 908-09 (1997). Similarly, Flanagan's numerous specific 12 allegations of significant bias establish cause for discovery and an evidentiary hearing.⁵⁷ Porter 13 v. State, 723 So.2d 191, 195-96 (1998) (evidentiary hearing warranted on impartiality claim).

14 Petitioner has met the standard for sustaining a claim of judicial bias. From the 15 beginning, Judge Mosley displayed an apparent bias against the defense. He told defense 16 lawyers he would not hear defense objections and instead required them to make their objections 17 to the court reporter during a recess (6 AA 1234-36; 8 AA 1895; 9 AA 2215; 30 AA 7148, Pike 18 Aff. ¶9). He pressed the case to trial and did not allow adequate resources for the defense (30 19 AA 7148, Pike Aff. ¶¶6-10). Judge Mosley's prejudice became overt after the second penalty 20 hearing when he refused to stay the execution to allow an appeal and habeas proceedings. He 21 said that Flanagan and Moore, "the convicted murderers in this case, have lived now in excess of 22 six years longer than the two people they killed, so I don't know that we are rushing into 23 anything here. In fact, in my view, we are about five-and-a-half years too late." (18 AA 4382).

25 have been his only chance to avoid death. Such an error cannot be cured with a subsequent penalty hearing. See Beets, 107 Nev. at 961.

26 ⁵⁷ Moreover, facts alleged here clearly show an "extremely high level of interference by the trial 27 judge" and rise to the level of creating "a pervasive climate of partiality and unfairness."
Duckett v. Godinez, 67 F.3d 734, 740 (9th Cir. 1995).

1 Upon defense motion (19 AA 4479), Judge Mosley was disqualified (Id.).

2 Similarly, in the third penalty phase, Judge Guy addressed all of the jurors (during voir 3 dire) and said “[w]e’re asking for the death penalty, the State’s asking for the death penalty, life 4 with or life without the possibility, and that’s an awesome burden for anybody.” (20 AA 4697).
5 The court’s identification with the prosecution (“we’re asking for the death penalty”) signaled to 6 the jury at the outset the result the court wanted to see.

7 Claim 21

8 Flanagan’s death sentence is invalid under state and federal constitutional guarantees of 9 due process, equal protection, and a reliable sentence because the Nevada capital punishment 10 system operates in an arbitrary and capricious manner. Although this Court has previously ruled 11 otherwise, Flanagan makes this claim to preserve his record.

12 Claim 22

13 Flanagan’s conviction and death sentence are invalid under state and federal 14 constitutional guarantees of due process of law, equal protection, the right to be informed of the 15 nature and cause of a criminal accusation and a reliable sentence because the charging document 16 did not specifically apprise Flanagan of those acts he was alleged to have committed. “The State 17 is required to give adequate notice to the accused of the various theories of the prosecution.”
18 State v. Eighth Judicial District Court, 116 Nev. 374, 377, 997 P.2d 126, 129 (2000); see also 19 Gardner, 430 U.S. at 357. “An indefinite indictment deprives a defendant of notice of the 20 particular act alleged to have been committed by the accused and deprives the defendant of his 21 ability to defend properly against the accusation” and “denies a defendant his fundamental 22 rights.” Wright v. State, 101 Nev. 269, 272, 701 P.2d 743, 744 (1985).⁵⁸

23 The Information failed to satisfy these standards (1 AA 19-24). Count VII charged 24 Flanagan with aiding and abetting the murder of Carl Gordon. The State never amended the

26 ⁵⁸ See also Forgy v. Norris, 64 F.3d 399, 403 (8th Cir. 1995). “Although any prosecutor might 27 well desire the luxury of having an option not to reveal his or her basic factual theories, and wish for the right to change the theory of a case at will, such practices hardly comport with accepted notions of due process.” Barren v. State, 99 Nev. 661, 669 P.2d 725, 729 (1983).

1 Information to charge Flanagan as a principal in Mr. Gordon's death. At trial, however, the State
2 proceeded against Flanagan on multiple theories, including that he acted as a principal. The jury 3 convicted Flanagan of First Degree murder of Mr. Gordon without ever specifying the theory of 4 liability used to convict (12 AA 2761-62). Such proceedings denied Flanagan due process.⁵⁹ 5 The State must give the defendant notice of all theories of liability on which the State intends to 6 proceed at trial. In Barren, the Court ordered a new trial when the State charged the defendant as 7 a principal but obtained a conviction of the defendant as an aider and abettor. 669 P.2d at 729;
8 see also Wright v. State, 701 P.2d at 744. Here, the Information charged Flanagan as an aider 9 and abettor but he was convicted as a principal. The principle is the same, but the consequences 10 were far more severe. Flanagan was not apprised of all theories of liability the State pursued at 11 trial and thus was not afforded adequate notice to prepare his defense.⁶⁰ Flanagan, therefore, is 12 entitled to a new trial on all counts given the importance of Count VII.

13 Claim 23

14 Flanagan's conviction and death sentence are invalid under state and federal 15 constitutional guarantees of due process, equal protection, the effective assistance of counsel and 16 a reliable sentence because of his absence during numerous critical stages of the proceedings.
17 The right to be present is rooted in the confrontation clause and the due process clause of the 18 federal constitution. See, e.g., U.S. v. Gagnon, 470 U.S. 522, 526-27 (1985); note 47, supra.

19 The court below concluded that this claim is merely another "bare/naked" allegation that 20 cannot withstand scrutiny absent evidentiary support, as contemplated by Hargrove, 100 Nev.
21 498. However, contrary to this assertion, Flanagan has raised specific factual allegations that, if 22 true, would entitle him to relief. Under Hargrove, factual substantiation does not require factual 23 proof, but only requires that Flanagan set forth factual background and other evidence

24 ⁵⁹ Trial counsel's failure to object to the faulty Information deprived Flanagan of his federal 25 constitutional right to effective assistance of counsel guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment.

26 ⁶⁰ See also State v. District Court, 116 Nev. 374, 997 P.2d 126 (2000) (upholding striking 27 portion of amended Information adding allegations of aiding and abetting); Simpson v. District Court, 88 Nev. 654, 659 60, 503 P.2d 1225, 1229-30 (1973) (precluding further proceedings under an indefinite indictment that would enable prosecutor to change theories).

1 demonstrating entitlement to relief. Furthermore, the requirement for factual substantiation 2 cannot negate Flanagan's right to pursue discovery and an evidentiary hearing to provide 3 additional support for this claim. Moreover, in most of the cited instances, Flanagan's absence is 4 apparent from the record. 6 AA 1462; 8 AA 1758, 1867; 12 AA 2812; 18 AA 4375; 19 AA 5 4523, 4637; 25 AA 6036. Because the State cannot demonstrate that Flanagan's absence has 6 harmless, he is entitled to relief. Rushen v. Spain, 464 U.S. 114, 117 n.2 (1983).

7 Claim 24

8 Flanagan's conviction and death sentence are invalid under state and federal 9 constitutional guarantees of due process, equal protection, a public trial, freedom of the press, 10 and a reliable sentence because the trial court failed to conduct all proceedings in public and 11 permit Flanagan to be present during trial and failed to ensure creation of a concrete record of the 12 trial by having such proceedings reported or otherwise recorded. Counsel was ineffective for 13 failing to assure that a proper record was made and that each of these rights was preserved.

14 Numerous portions of the trial were closed to the public and to Flanagan because the 15 court conducted numerous off-the-record bench conferences and unrecorded conferences in 16 chambers. See, e.g., 6 AA 1462; 8 AA 1758, 1867; 12 AA 2812; 18 AA 4375; 19 AA 4523, 17 4637; 25 AA 6036. The court failed to articulate any reason for holding such conferences and 18 chambers proceedings. Moreover, the off-the-record bench conferences and in-chambers 19 meetings were never transcribed. Likewise, it failed to take any measures to assure that 20 Flanagan was informed of the content of these conferences that were held in his absence.

21 During these unrecorded conferences, the court took material, substantial actions, 22 including ruling on objections, clarifying evidentiary rulings, and establishing courtroom 23 procedure and scheduling. Such proceedings are integral parts of a criminal trial. The court also 24 failed to seek other measures to effectuate the public interest in the proceedings, such as the 25 delayed release of transcripts. These numerous off the record conferences violated Flanagan's 26 constitutional rights, as well as those of the public to free and open proceedings. His counsel 27 unreasonably and prejudicially failed to object to this deprivation of his constitutional rights.

1 Similarly, although some proceedings were recorded, the reporter was not obligated, 2 under Nevada rules, to maintain notes of those proceedings for longer than eight years. NRS
3 656.335. Apparently, trial counsel did not order those transcripts, which constitutes ineffective 4 assistance of counsel, and by the time they were ordered for these habeas proceedings, the 5 reporter's notes had been discarded (31 AA 7571; 33 AA 7938, Newell Aff. ¶4; 33 AA 7971).

6 Flanagan was entitled to a public trial, be present as the court heard argument from 7 counsel and made important decisions about his case, and a complete record of the proceedings
8 so that his conviction could be meaningfully appealed. See Draper v. Washington, 372 U.S. 487
9 (1963); Nevada Supreme Court Rule 250; Manley v. State, 115 Nev. 114, 979 P.2d 703 (1999) 10 (SCR 250 mandates that all proceedings in a capital case be reported and transcribed).

11 Claim 25

12 Flanagan's conviction and death sentence are invalid under state and federal 13 constitutional guarantees of due process, equal protection, the effective assistance of counsel, a 14 fair tribunal, an impartial jury, and a reliable sentence due to the cumulative errors in the 15 admission of evidence and unconstitutional jury instructions, misconduct by state officials and 16 witnesses, and ineffective assistance of counsel. See Butler v. State, 102 P.3d 71, 85-86 (2004)
17 (granting relief on cumulative errors); Duckett v. Mullin, 306 F.3d 982, 992 (10th Cir. 2002).

18 Claims 26 and 27

19 Flanagan's death sentence is invalid under state and federal constitutional guarantees of 20 due process, equal protection, and a reliable sentence because execution by lethal injection 21 violates the constitutional prohibition against cruel and unusual punishments and because the 22 death penalty is cruel and unusual punishment. The Eighth Amendment forbids the infliction of 23 unnecessary pain in carrying out a death sentence.⁶¹ Nevada's lethal injection protocol violates 24 the Eighth Amendment because it will subject Flanagan to an unreasonable and unacceptable 25

26 ⁶¹ See Louisiana ex rel. Francis v. Resweber, 329 U.S. 459, 463 (1947) (Reed, J, opinion.).
27 Further, "[p]unishments are cruel when they involve . . . a lingering death." In re Kemmler, 136
U.S. 436, 447 (1890); see also Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238, 273 (1973).

1 risk of unnecessary physical and psychological pain and involves execution procedures that 2 offend contemporary norms and standards of society. See Atkins v. Virginia, 536 U.S. 304
3 (2002). The recent medical controversy surrounding lethal injection executions warrants a closer 4 analysis of the process and substances used by of Nevada. See, e.g., Nelson v. Campbell, 541 5 U.S. 637 (2004). Moreover, the denial of discovery and an evidentiary hearing foreclosed any 6 decision in favor of the constitutionality of lethal injection as it is administered in Nevada.

7 Claim 28

8 Flanagan's sentence is invalid under state and federal constitutional guarantees of due 9 process, equal protection and a reliable sentence because Flanagan may become incompetent to 10 be executed. Although petitioner is not subject to immediate execution, this claim is raised to 11 ensure future federal review of the claim. See Martinez-Villareal v. Stewart, 118 F.3d 628 (9th 12 Cir. 1997), aff'd, 118 S.Ct. 1618 (1998).

13 Claim 29

14 Flanagan's conviction and death sentence are invalid under state and federal 15 constitutional guarantees of due process, equal protection, trial before an impartial jury and a 16 reliable sentence because the trial court's failure to sever his trial from his co-defendants resulted 17 in the jury's use of inadmissible evidence to convict Flanagan. Moreover, the trial court 18 compounded this error by refusing to allow Flanagan's counsel to seek severance during trial and 19 by not addressing the severance motions when they were raised during the trial.

20 Under Nevada law, a severance is required when "it appears that a defendant of the State 21 of Nevada is prejudiced by a joinder of offenses or of defendants in an indictment or 22 information, or by such joinder for trial together." NRS 174.165. A severance is required upon 23 good cause, which exists when "the evidence proposed to be introduced as to one must be 24 inadmissible as to the other, and of such a nature as to afford reasonable ground for the belief 25 that the other will be prejudiced by a joint trial." State v. Lewis, 255 P. 1002, 1005, 50 Nev. 212 26 (1927). Federal law also requires courts to grant severances when joinder creates prejudice. See, 27 e.g., Zafiro v. U.S., 506 U.S. 534, 539 (1993) (severance should be granted "if there is a serious

1 risk that a joint trial would compromise a specific trial right of one of the defendants, or prevent 2 the jury from making a reliable judgment about guilt or innocence”).

3 Flanagan was deprived of his Sixth Amendment right to an impartial jury because the 4 jury was allowed to consider prejudicial evidence as a result of the court’s refusal to sever the 5 trial. See, e.g., U.S. v. Tootick, 952 F.2d 1078, 1083 (9th Cir. 1991). A severance was required
6 because Flanagan and co-defendant Lockett had antagonistic defenses and Lockett’s coercion 7 defense necessarily prejudiced Flanagan. U.S. v. Sherlock, 962 F.2d 1349, 1362-63 (9th Cir.
8 1989) (severance required when defenses are mutually exclusive and “the acceptance of one 9 party’s defense will preclude the acquittal of the other party”). As explained above, evidence of 10 devil worship and gang activity played a prominent role at trial. See Claim 3, supra. This type 11 of evidence is highly prejudicial as well as inadmissible. Dawson, 503 U.S. at 168. As a result 12 of this prejudicial information, the jury was improperly biased against Flanagan.

13 Moreover, the trial court failed to ameliorate the prejudicial evidence by properly 14 instructing the jury. Zafiro, 506 U.S. at 326 (“less drastic measures, such as limiting 15 instructions, often will suffice to cure any risk of prejudice.”); Lewis, 50 Nev. at 222 (jury 16 instructed to disregard evidence as to one defendant). The jury was not instructed to disregard 17 the devil worship and gang evidence when determining Flanagan’s guilt; instead, the jury was 18 instructed to consider “all of the evidence.” (12 AA 2745). Flanagan suffered undue prejudice.

19 Claim 30

20 Flanagan’s death sentence is invalid under state and federal constitutional guarantees of 21 due process, equal protection, trial by an impartial jury and a reliable sentence because Nevada 22 effectively has no mechanism to provide for clemency in capital cases. As the Court noted in 23 Gregg, a capital punishment system without clemency “would be totally alien to our notions of 24 criminal justice.” 428 U.S. at 199 n.50; see also Herrera v. Collins, 506 U.S. 390, 411-12
25 (1993). Likewise, clemency is an integral part of Nevada’s criminal justice system. See Ex 26 parte Janes, 1 Nev. 319 (1865); Nev. Const. Art. 5, § 14. The Supreme Court has held that 27 “some minimal procedural safeguards apply to clemency proceedings.” Ohio Adult Parole

1 Authority v. Woodard, 523 U.S. 272, 289 (1998). Moreover, having established a clemency
2 process, Nevada must ensure such procedures comport with due process. Evitts, 469 U.S. at 393;
3 Goldsworthy v. Hannifin, 86 Nev. 252, 256, 468 P.2d 350, 353 (1970)

4 Flanagan is afforded no such procedural due process under Nevada's clemency statute, 5 NRS 213.005-213.100, and its corresponding administrative code, NAC §§ 213.010 – 213.210.
6 First, there is no right to a hearing. See, e.g., Matthews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319, 333 (1976)
7 (due process requires the right to be heard). While Flanagan may ask for one, the final authority 8 to approve the application rests with the executive secretary of the Board of Pardon 9 Commissioners. NAC 213.090(2). Second, the composition of the Board precludes an unbiased 10 proceeding. See Daniel T. Kobil, Due Process in Death Penalty Commutations: Life, Liberty, 11 and the Pursuit of Clemency, 27 U. Rich. L. Rev. 201, 224-25 (1993). Other than the governor, 12 the Board consists of the Justices of the Supreme Court and the Attorney General, NRS 213.010, 13 all of whom will have previously participated in the capital proceedings. Finally, if the hearing 14 results in a denial, the Board would not issue a reasoned opinion since hearings are "informal in 15 nature and regular rules of evidence or other formalities do not apply." NAC 213.190.
16 Consequently, there is no way of ensuring that Flanagan will receive meaningful consideration.⁶²

17 Claim 31

18 Flanagan's conviction and death sentence are invalid under state and federal 19 constitutional guarantees of due process, equal protection, trial before an impartial jury and a 20 reliable sentence because jurors viewed him in shackles and were aware of armed guards in the 21 courtroom during trial. The Supreme Court has identified three "inherent disadvantages and 22 limitations" in using shackles: (1) physical restraints may cause jury prejudice, reversing the 23 presumption of innocence; (2) shackles may impede the communication between the defendant 24 and his lawyer, thus violating the Sixth Amendment; and (3) shackles may detract from the 25 ⁶² Since 1973, 139 individuals have been sentenced to death in Nevada. Bureau of Justice 26 Statistics Report, Capital Punishment 2002 (November 2004 NCJ 206627). The Board has 27 commuted only one death sentence through the clemency process since the reinstatement of the death penalty. As a practical matter, Nevada's practice of denying commutation amounts to an arbitrary denial of "any access to its clemency process." Woodard, 523 U.S. at 289.

1 dignity and decorum of the judicial proceedings. Illinois v. Allen, 397 U.S. 337, 344 (1970); see 2 also Deck v. Missouri, 125 S.Ct. 2067 (2005). The Ninth Circuit similarly has found that visible 3 shackling may “mark [a defendant] as an obviously bad man [,] . . . suggest that the fact of his 4 guilt is a foregone conclusion” (Stewart v. Corbin, 850 F. 2d 492, 497 (9th Cir. 1988)) and 5 “create[s] an inherent danger that the jury may form the impression that the defendant is 6 dangerous or untrustworthy.” Rhoden v. Rowland, 172 F.3d 633, 636 (9th Cir. 1999).

7 “Because visible shackling during trial is so likely to cause a defendant prejudice,” the 8 Ninth Circuit “only permits it when justified by an essential state interest specific to each trial.”
9 Rhoden, 172 F.3d at 636. To demonstrate this “essential state interest,” courts must engage in a 10 two-step analysis before permitting shackling. First, the trial court must “be persuaded by 11 compelling circumstances that some measure is needed to maintain security of the courtroom.”
12 Second, the trial court must consider “less restrictive alternatives” before deciding upon 13 shackling. Duckett v. Godinez, 67 F.3d 734, 748 (9th 1995). It is a “denial of due process if a 14 trial court orders a defendant shackled without” first engaging in this two-part analysis. Id.

15 Neither criterion was properly applied here. There was no evidence that Flanagan had 16 threatened to escape or threatened to injure. Nor were there any incidents of disruption to justify 17 shackling him in front of the jury. Indeed, in “all cases” in which shackling has been approved, 18 evidence existed of “disruptive courtroom behavior, attempts to escape from custody, assaults or 19 attempted assaults while in custody, or a pattern of defiant behavior toward corrections officials 20 and judicial authorities.” Id. at 749. None of those circumstances existed here.

21 Without engaging in the required analysis, the court required Flanagan to wear shackles 22 throughout the trial, except while court was in session. This resulted in the jury seeing Flanagan 23 in chains (30 AA 7137, Buchanan Dec. ¶2). The jurors returned before the guards had removed 24 the shackles from Flanagan, the guards removed the shackles in full sight of the jury (Id.).
25 Flanagan thus is entitled to relief because his improper shackling was visible to the jurors, and 26 this error substantially influenced the jury’s verdict, particularly in light of the continuous and 27

1 unjustified presence of armed guards in the courtroom. Rhoden, 172 F.3d at 636.⁶³

2 Claim 32

3 Petitioner's conviction and sentence of death are invalid under state and federal 4 constitutional guarantees of due process, equal protection and a reliable sentence because he the 5 trial and appellate judges responsible for rulings in his case were elected, subject to re-election 6 and therefore beholden to the electorate and could not be impartial. Nev. Const. Art. 6 §§ 3, 5.
7 see also Claims 11, 19, 20, 21. Conducting a capital trial or direct appeal before a partial tribunal 8 is prejudicial per se and requires that Flanagan's capital conviction and sentence be vacated.

9 When the U.S. Constitution was adopted, the common law definition of due process 10 included the requirement that judges who presided over trials in capital cases have tenure during 11 good behavior, as do appellate judges. This mechanism was intended to, and did, preserve 12 judicial independence by insulating judicial officers. Nevada law does not insulate judges from 13 majoritarian pressures. Making unpopular rulings favorable to a capital defendant risks removal 14 from office. See Tumey v. Ohio, 273 U.S. 510, 532 (1927); Aetna Life Ins. v. Lavoie, 475 U.S.
15 813, 824-25 (1986); In re: Murchison, 349 U.S. 133, 136 (1955).

16 Flanagan's case involved both massive media attention and intense prosecutorial 17 exploitation of the jurors and potential jurors' knowledge of the case. See Claim 6. A ruling 18 favorable to Flanagan on any dispositive issue, at trial or on direct appeal, would have serious 19 consequences to the re-election of any judicial officer making such a ruling, and at minimum 20 would have required the expenditure of significant resources in time and money to retain office.

21 Claim 33

22 Flanagan's death sentence is invalid under state and federal constitutional guarantees of 23 due process of law, equal protection of the laws, effective assistance of counsel, trial by an 24 impartial jury, and a reliable sentence by his attorney's failure to challenge for cause jurors who 25

26 ⁶³ This Court should remand for a hearing to determine the degree of prejudice Flanagan's 27 visible shackling had on the jury's verdict. See, e.g., Parrish v. Small, 315 F.3d 1131 (9th Cir.
2003) (hearing necessary to determine prejudice); Rhoden, 10 F.3d 1457 (same).

could not be impartial.⁶⁴ At the third penalty hearing, Flanagan's counsel unreasonably and prejudicially failed to challenge a juror who stated that she would not consider life with possibility of parole as an option (21 AA 5126). The seating of a juror biased in favor of a death sentence was erroneous and prejudicial. Flanagan's counsel also failed to challenge for cause two other jurors who openly advocated use of the death penalty, including a juror who stated that if he were one of the defendants he would not want someone like himself on the jury "[c]ause nobody wants to die." (19 AA 4614-37; 21 AA 5088-89, 5099). Instead of challenging for cause, Flanagan's counsel used two peremptory challenges to remove these jurors, challenges that could have been used to select a jury more favorably disposed to a penalty less than death. Counsel's actions were unreasonable and prejudicial. See, e.g., Berry v. Gramley, 74 F. Supp. 2d 808 (N.D. Ill. 1999) (failure to challenge two jurors for cause was ineffective).

Claims 34 and 35

Flanagan's conviction and death sentence are invalid under the state and federal constitutional guarantees of due process, equal protection, trial before an impartial jury and a reliable sentence because the proceedings against him violate international law. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights ["UDHR"]; recognize the right to life. G.A. Res. 217, U.N. Doc. A/810, art. 3 (1948). Similarly the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted December 19, 1966, art. 6, 999 U.N.T.S. 171 ["ICCPR"] obligates parties to both "respect and ensure to all individuals within its territory . . . the rights recognized in the present Covenant, without distinction of any kind" ICCPR at Art 2.⁶⁵ Therefore, Nevada has an obligation not to take life arbitrarily. In Van Alphen v. The Netherlands, (No. 305/1988), U.N. Doc. A/45/40, Vol. II, p. 108, §5.8, the Human ⁶⁴ The District Court incorrectly found that, the challenges to the jury selection in the second penalty trial were mooted by the granting of the third penalty hearing. The constitutionality of all hearings are properly considered in this proceeding, particularly because had the errors not occurred, the second hearing may have been Flanagan's only opportunity to receive a sentence less than death. See note 14, supra; Claims 18 and 19, supra.

⁶⁵ Nevada is bound by the ICCPR because the U.S. has signed and ratified the treaty and is bound by the UDHR because it is a fundamental part of customary International Law.

1 Rights Committee held that "arbitrariness" includes inappropriateness, injustice, and lack of 2 predictability.⁶⁶ Thus, Flanagan's convictions and sentence violation of International Law.⁶⁷

3 Claim 36

4 Flanagan's sentence is invalid under state and federal constitutional guarantees of due 5 process, equal protection, and a reliable sentence because, as a result of the state's egregious 6 misconduct, he has endured three trials and appeals, and has been on death row for 20 years 7 without finality, which constitutes cruel and unusual punishment. See, e.g., Lackey v. Texas, 8 514 U.S. 1045, 1047 (1995) Claims 24 and 27, supra.

9 IV. CONCLUSION

10 These statutory and constitutional violations, individually and cumulatively, require 11 relief. The facts presented below amply demonstrate that Flanagan is entitled to a new trial. In 12 the alternative, a remand full and fair fact-finding is required.
