Patricia Miller Has anyone thought of the obvious? Relocate Carl Lackey. Has anyone looked into the four (4) orphaned cubs born Jan. 1 and trying to grow up without the direction of their mother. One of the first things a baby bear learns is "climb a tree". They don't have that luxury. And, what about the beautiful teenager that was killed in Sand Harbor two weeks ago. He didn't even have one ear tag but NDOw shot him anyway. So, so sad.

NDOV has set a bear trap at Mariette Lake. If bears can't just exist in the forest, remove from towns and even roads, where are they supposed to be? NDOV has too much free time, too much taxpayer money to waste, and not enough competence to be allowed to manage our precious wildlife.

Carl Lackey has argued repeatedly in the past that they must trap bears and move them to remote locations to perform aversion training (or to kill them). But Mariette Lake is REMOTE! Why can't Lackey's team just do aversion training there? Because they don't actually do aversion work, it's a sham, because Lackey doesn't know how. NDOV's own consulting biologist (a real biologist) has said that NDOV's bear management program doesn't work. No shit - NDOV has the highest kill rate as a percent of population of any jurisdiction in North America. #LackeyMustGo #HireRealBiologist #NDOV

Tensions high over Tahoe bears

By Tom Knudson - tknudson@sacbee.com

Drawn by the scent of months-old garbage, the mother bear clawed her way into the garage of the Lake Tahoe condo – twice.

But when Ian Knight, a game warden with the Nevada Department of Wildlife, showed up to capture her, he found himself outsmarted – not by the bear but by bear-lovers.

People huddled near his culvert-like trap, waiting to shoo the bear away if it returned. Some booed him. A woman cried. He sniffed the air and caught the scent of Pine-Sol, a bear deterrent, on the trap; inside, someone had tossed two teddy bears.

“It makes me frustrated,” Knight said. “I’m just trying to do a job, trying to help these bears not cause problems and move them into a different area.”

Rimmed by snow-clad peaks, as blue as a tropical sea, Lake Tahoe is one of the nation’s most magnificent settings. But today, that splendor masks a divisive drama onshore: a bitter battle over bears.

On one side are members of the Bear League, a feisty California nonprofit, and other animal activists who say too many bears are being lured into danger by careless trash management and needlessly killed.

“They are just gorgeous creatures, and they are so misunderstood,” said Carolyn Stark, a Bear League board member who helped maintain a round-the-clock vigil at Knight’s trap. “It’s so unfair. I want to help protect them.”

On the other side are wildlife biologists who say such action risks backfiring by allowing bears to become too comfortable around people, making them potentially more dangerous.

ADVERTISING

“They are allowing bears to progress up that ladder of conflict,” said Carl Lackey, a bear biologist with the Nevada Department of Wildlife. “Once a bear is inside somebody’s house, we have to go in and kill the bear.”

Activists aren’t just thwarting game wardens. Some are making threatening late-night calls to residents and business owners who have reported bear problems, and posting slurs and threats online.

This year, Incline Village landscaper Tony Robinson said he received two anonymous calls after he reported a bear problem and a wildlife biologist arrived with a trap.

“The first was like: ‘If you don’t get rid of that trap, we’re going to kill you,’” Robinson said. “The second one (said), ‘We’re going to destroy your business and screw up your boats and destroy your property.’”

In California, John Brissenden, manager of Sorensen’s Resort near Lake Tahoe in Hope Valley, said employees were threatened after two bears were killed there in 2012.

“We were branded as murderers and executioners,” said Brissenden, a board member of the Sierra Nevada Conservancy, a state agency, and a longtime conservationist. “It was alarming, discouraging, given our 40 years of protecting wildlife habitat, including bear habitat.”

Ann Bryant, executive director of the Bear League, said her group’s activism is both civil and legal.

"We are a peaceful people," Bryant said. "We don't tolerate ill treatment of wildlife, but we sure don't take our revenge out. We don't tamper with traps. We don't threaten people."

Mark Smith, an Incline Village mining consultant who rallies bear lovers to trap sites on a website called the Lake Tahoe Wall of Shame, said citizen action is crucial.

"I think we have an obligation, as members of a democracy, when our government stops serving us, to take certain action, nonviolent action," Smith said. But he added: "I think it's unfortunate that fear is part of the equation. Fear is an inappropriate tool."

At its simplest, the conflict is about how best to live with animals so charismatic that activists give them names – Jasper, Cloud, Rascal, Calvin, Butterscotch – but which also can be destructive and on rare occasions deadly.

"We are the intruders here," said Ali Van Zee, a Bear League board member. "If you want to live in a beautiful area like this, let's learn how to live with the animals that are here."

Lackey, the bear biologist, believes in more hands-on management, saying animals that become too accustomed to people should be captured, relocated and – if they become too dangerous – killed.

"Black bears are normally very tolerant of human presence, but it only takes one time to ruin your day," he said. "NDOW (the Nevada Department of Wildlife) errs on the side of caution."

But the biggest problem may be human. In some cases, Tahoe residents no longer call authorities about problem bears because they're more afraid of bear lovers.

"We've had residences broken into by bears where the occupants made the statement that the people were more dangerous than the bears," said Tony Wasley, director of the Nevada wildlife department. "For that reason, they didn't want a trap or, in one case, asked that the trap be removed."

Bill Devine, an Incline Village trustee and a Washoe County sheriff's sergeant, is concerned.

"It's almost like a vigilante-type mentality," he said. "If you see something like that and don't report it, who's to say the next house the bear breaks into doesn't have some kids in it?"

Bear numbers booming

They are the ultimate omnivore, content to dine on everything from pine nuts to pork chops, kokanee salmon to potato salad. Around Tahoe, they're not just celebrated; they're mourned. When a bear known as Charlie was captured and killed by authorities in Incline Village in 2011, activists held a candlelight vigil.

"They're not just another animal," said Smith, the pro-bear activist. "There is something special about bears. It's hard to explain. The more I am with them, the closer I feel to them."

Few people spend more time with bears than Lackey, the Nevada biologist. "They can be very human-like," he said. "They are very persistent. They will figure things out."

"I've had bears open jars," Lackey said. "I had a bear that drank a whole six-pack of beer. He bit a hole in the top of each can and drank every one. Then he went and rolled around on a trampoline."

Bears numbers are booming. In California, the population is estimated at more than 30,000, up from 10,000 to 15,000 three decades ago. Some 200 to 300 animals are believed to inhabit the California side where lately they have stayed mostly out of trouble.

"This year has been relatively stable, definitely lower numbers than some past years for significant conflicts," said Jason Holley, a supervising wildlife biologist with the California Department of Fish and Wildlife.

They are thriving on the Nevada side, too, which is home to one of the highest densities of bears in North America, according to the Nevada wildlife department. Human-bear conflicts are on the upswing in Nevada, too, averaging around 250 per year, up from less than 100 in the late 1990s.

Most conflicts are tied to trash, and Incline Village – a well-heeled community of woodsy homes on the northeast shore of Lake Tahoe – is a hotspot.

"Monday through Friday are collection days," said Smith, who is 56. "If you drive around, you'll see tattered, raggedy plastic bins. You'll see Glad Bags on the street waiting for pick-up."

"On any given week, there'll be one neighborhood where a bear's wandered in and he's going door to door, ravaging those trash bags. I think that's ludicrous."

Incline Village trustees are weighing a proposal to make bearproof containers mandatory but took no action on it last month, disappointing wildlife officials.

"Dealing with trash is the only effective way to address nuisance bears," said Wasley, the Nevada wildlife director. "It's unfair for Incline Village to expect the department to address their bear issues when they are unwilling to manage their trash."

A capital offense

When bears do get into trouble, bear lovers say, the Nevada wildlife department responds excessively, especially bear biologist Lackey.

"Carl Lackey is the ultimate bear serial killer," said the Bear League's Bryant. "He's killed more bears than old snaggletooth hunters. He kills sometimes several a month."

Lackey is a familiar target on the Bear League and Lake Tahoe Wall of Shame Facebook pages. "Carl is on a killing spree," one person wrote. "Oh, please beat the crap out of this guy," another added.

Not long ago, Ron Stiller, an Incline Village business consultant trying to defuse the tension, sat down to talk with Lackey. "I made him take his hat off to check for horns – and I didn't find any," Stiller said. "I checked his coffee. There was no bear blood in it.

"It's always easy when you have a movement to have an enemy," Stiller said. "They've made him the enemy. Carl's a good guy. He's a good husband, a good father."

Stiller also has met with pro-bear activists.

"There is a time to protest and a time to lay off," he said. "If you take it too far, you get polarization. Then what pays the ultimate price are the entities everybody is trying to protect: the bears."

For his part, Lackey – who has a bachelor's degree in wildlife management and has co-authored five peer-reviewed articles about bears – shrugs off the criticism.

"I've got some pretty thick skin," he said. "I've got too many things on my plate to worry about things they're saying, especially when they are lies."

Since late 1996, Lackey has responded to more than 3,500 human-bear conflicts, handled bears more than 900 times and put down about 80.

"I've been very consistent when I kill a bear and when I don't," he said. "If I know I have the right bear and that bear is either breaking into homes or very aggressively seeking human food, it's a dead bear."

That rule was put to the test last month when a bear wandered into Incline Village and began sniffing around some vehicles, drawn by a doughnut on a dashboard.

Lackey set up his trap in a quiet driveway, out of sight of bear activists. Overnight, the door slammed shut. When Lackey arrived the next day, he had a job on his hands.

Inside was a surly, restless 160-pound male with no ear tags or other markings, meaning it hadn't been captured before and likely was not habituated to people. And it was young, making it a good candidate for rehab. This bear would live.

After sedating the animal, Lackey knelt beside it and clipped tags on both ears. He drew a blood sample and stenciled a tattoo on the animal's gum. He worked quickly and said very little. But a beige cap on his head bore a message: "Think! like a BEAR."

A day later, on a rocky mountain road outside town, Lackey lifted the trap door. After hesitating for a moment, the bear leaped to the ground with two yelping dogs on its heels and the sharp bang-bang of two non-lethal shotgun rounds in its ears, headed for the rugged Carson Range.

The goal was to scare the bear, a process called aversive conditioning. "We're trying to change their behavior, make them so they are not so comfortable around people," Lackey said.

Let sleeping bears lie

Bear League activists argue that by releasing bears in mountain terrain, Lackey is only making them afraid of the wild. "He punishes them in the area where he wants them to supposedly stay," said Bryant. "Carl does it wrong."

She believes in conditioning bears when and where they get into trouble, saying that sends a more direct message.

"When a bear is where he shouldn't be, tell him right then and there," Bryant said. "Wave your arms and stomp your feet." Once the animal has fled into the forest, "you stop and say, 'Good bear.'"

Lackey is a fan of on-site conditioning, too, but said it's often risky in congested settings. "The last thing I want to do is get a bear or my dogs run over by a car," he said.

Since 1998, Bryant said, she has responded to more than 2,500 bear conflicts that have led to the deaths of just two bears. "I agreed they were incorrigible," she said. "Prior to allowing them to be killed, I searched for other options."

Bryant, 62, applies her tough-love with paintball gun, rubber buckshot and a fierce passion that has brought her frequent media coverage: She was the focus of an Animal Planet miniseries, "Blonde vs Bear," in 2011 – and also sometimes stirs conflict with wardens, wildlife biologists and homeowners.

In 2010, one incident turned ugly on the California side after a home where a bear had been trapped was vandalized. As an El Dorado County sheriff's deputy wrote in a report, blood-colored paint covered "the exterior walls, windows, the stone chimney, the slate porch, the Trex decking and stairs, the roof and the planters."

The deputy contacted the Bear League. "Bryant was unaware of the vandalism (and) advised if she received any information ... she would let me know immediately," he wrote in the report.

"We are accused of all kinds of things," said Bryant, who majored in psychology and philosophy at Mankato State University in Minnesota. "People who don't like bears don't like us. We know that."

"Maybe I don't just quietly sit back and say, 'yes, sir, no, sir,'" Bryant said. "I will speak how I feel. But I am not a terrorist, and I don't break the law."

With blonde hair that spills over her shoulders, black sunglasses and black gloves, she is a well-recognized figure around Tahoe. Her group has about 1,500 members and 250 trained volunteers. "We have to be the voice for these animals," she said.

Not long ago, she was called out to the scene of a potential human-bear conflict in Kings Beach on the California side, where a 250-pound bear lay napping behind a pizza joint.

Bryant walked to within a few yards of the animal and spoke to it. "You're quite comfortable there, aren't you?" she said.

The bear, dozing near a bag of garbage, didn't seem to notice. A few moments later, it lifted its head and gazed at its human visitors. "It's OK, doll," said Van Zee, a Bear League board member who had accompanied Bryant. The bear went back to sleep.

The animal had shown up overnight, after breaking through a wooden fence.

"This bear's mellow," said Rick Buhler, owner of the pizza take-out and delivery business. "I've dealt with it for two years now. He doesn't seem to be in any mood to harm anybody. I just don't want him coming back."

Bryant could have chased the animal off, but with a busy highway nearby, she chose to let a sleeping bear lie.

After the bear left that evening, a Bear League volunteer dumped Pine-Sol on his napping spot. Buhler patched up the fence and hasn't seen the animal since.

A bear named Cloud

Black bears generally leave people alone, but not always. Since 1900, at least 63 people have been killed, most in Canada and Alaska, and none in California and Nevada. A recent study found 86 percent of those fatalities have occurred since 1960, as human and bear populations have grown.

Bryant contends the more habituated bears are around people, the safer they are likely to be. "Animals who grow up around our villages, especially here in Tahoe, are the least likely to harm a human," she said.

But there was a close call this year in Incline Village. It happened when a young, light-colored bear that activists had named Cloud walked into a condo occupied by a disabled 92-year-old woman.

"Bears just don't walk in out of the wild and break into homes," said Lackey, the Nevada biologist. "If they had it named, that tells me it had been in that area long enough to become human-habituated."

The woman escaped unharmed, but the condo did not. The bear tipped over a dresser, broke a window, tore up a couch and ripped up molding. In 2001, a similar break-in ended tragically for a 93-year-old New Mexico woman.

"The same scenario: an elderly lady, a conflict bear," Lackey said. "She got killed."

In Incline Village, the bear was still inside the woman's condo when Lackey arrived at 12:35 a.m. There was no doubt about its fate. It was guilty of home invasion – a capital offense. After darting the animal with a sedative, Lackey shot it through the head with a .22.

"I didn't become a biologist to kill bears," Lackey said. "We do a lot of good for bears in Nevada, but we err on the side of caution when bears are in homes. Killing that bear was justified."

Bear lovers were furious.

"We demand a new biologist," one activist stated on the Lake Tahoe Wall of Shame's Facebook page. "Cloud was a gentle, sweet bear. He was our 'poster child.'"

Lake Tahoe Wall of Shame At a minimum they violate both the rules of his employment (misuse of public property for personal use and intentional endangerment of the public) and NDOV rules for use of the traps (which is also a violation of the employment). These would be sufficient evidence for his termination if NDOV wasn't more concerned with keeping Carl employed than managing wildlife.

Lake Tahoe Wall of Shame We've found that reporting bad acts by NDOV employees never results in action. But exposing them to public scrutiny gets the attention of senior NDOV management and sometimes even Governor Sandoval's office. This is one of the core reasons that the Wall of Shame was created.

Kat Simmons This runs along the same lines as posing with your trophy kit only without the kit. It shows a "power over mentality" and shows zero respect for his job nor the wildlife. It would be like a doctor posing with his unconscious patients for the thrill of it. Very, very unprofessional, as well as dangerous.

Like Reply 10 hrs

Kate Macerthey Everything Carl does is way better than anything done anywhere else! He does avoidance bear training, too. Everywhere else bears are just shot under depreddation permits. And in some places in the Sierras, bears do $100,000 in property damage a year and are dangerous to humans because they have no fear.

Like Reply 10 hrs

Lake Tahoe Wall of Shame As to your claim about $100,000 a year in damage, that's simply untrue. But even if it were true, Lesley spends several times that annually and under his direction the problems have gotten worse. So we're spending $3 to save $1 and in the mean time increasing the problem. Talk about incompetent!

Shepharrie Yutnick DANGEROUS to humans?? Only if your dumb enough to get that close to an injured bear, moose and elk or bear food! Otherwise you respect their space and they don't care your there. 44 years in Tahoe... we encountered a few bears and never felt threatened.

Like Reply 1 - 7 hrs

Katie Daphne Have you all forgotten that Lesley and his crew are one of the rare few that actually fight for the bears to keep their lives? He wants to release every bear he catches back into the wild rather than kill it. So what if he poses with the tranquilized bears, he's proud of what he does - saving them! Unbelievable the stupid things people overreact to.

Like Reply 4 - 7 hrs

Lake Tahoe Wall of Shame What's unbelievable is that you bought NDOV's mythology. Carl and his team kill more bears as a percent of the bear population than any other jurisdiction in North America. That alone is a shocking statistic. For 4 years in a row I don't have statistics for the last 2 years you they killed HALF the Bears trapped in Indiana Village. In one 3-year period they killed almost 100 Bears - 25% of the State's bear population! And 80% of the female bears released in that same period were moved to hunting zones. Overall, only 1 in 3 relocated bears survives to the next season, so being trapped by Carl gives the bear less than a 1 in 6 chance of living. Nothing they do promotes the health of our Bears and nothing they do follow established procedures from successful bear management experts. As a contrast, in a 35-yr period Mammoth - which has more people and more bears - killed only one bear and had less trouble with so called nuisance bears. Because killing bears isn't the solution, solving the attractant problem and reconditioning problem bears is.

Incline Village bear trap alert: NDOW has a trap in the area but at this time we don't know it's location. Volunteers are searching and we'll post updates as we learn more. Speaking of bear traps, here are a few photos of Carly Lackey, his children and friends handling "dangerous" bears and entering bear traps in direct violation of NDOW rules as posted on the traps. (Note: these photos are shared under the Fair Use provision of the Copyright Act as news, criticism and as otherwise allowed under Section 107. Jane Rothman @lasecky is a liar. He promotes trapping, killing and relocating our bears under the guise of "Public Safety" but then after trapping (usually the wrong bear), he takes the bear that is waking up from anesthesia to a school for show and tell??!!!!!!!! How can Lasecky and Healy make public statements to the press stating NDOW has to kill and relocate bears to the hunt zone due to "Liability issues" and at the same time act in such reckless manner by taking the bear into a school??!! Stop the double talk NDOW, and Lasecky you are a twisted individual @lasecky @monorelasecky @nobearhunt: #stoprelocatingbears @nobearhuntzone Bonnie Turner-Estepp He also takes his children to work with him and then lets them hold bear cubs. It's hard to see it but the little smallest child is holding one too. It bears are as dangerous as he tries to tell people they are 1) why does he take his children to work with him and 2) why does he take bears to his home and/or to his child's school to be around other people's children?

Shanen Ruppel · September 2 at 11:10pm · Edited

Shanen Ruppel Why on earth would anyone relocate a bear from its natural habitat to an area that is desert like with juniper trees and lava rock and no water or food resources? How does any hunter find this a challenge and continue to participate with a clear conscience? Isn't it a major conflict of interest that Lasecky works for NDOW, captures bears and hunts and kills them??!!!!!! I wonder if his bank account shows a bunch of deposits from misc hunters who pay him for his bear trapping services? Absolutely crazy that Sandoval, NDOW, the Feds and everyone else allows this to happen. How can the community be so blind that they cannot see what damage he is doing and continue to call him?

Lake Tahoe Wall of Shame

A number of tools have been posing threatening and otherwise delinquent comments in our threads about the ludicrous photos with bears by Carl Lackey. Some have claimed, rather forcefully, that "he's doing nothing wrong" or "NDOW is here to help, leave them alone." Beyond the obvious things wrong in the pictures - allowing dangerous proximity of children to wild bears, violating state law and NDOW rules, and harassing bear cubs to human contact - there is plenty wrong with both Lackey and NDOW, and that's not just our opinion. Consider these facts:

- Former director of NDOW, Ken Meyer. Fired by Governor Sandoval (unprecedented)
- Wildlife Commission: three commissioners fired by Gov. Sandoval (unprecedented)
- Nevada Senate sunset committee: held hearings on the elimination of the wildlife commission due to incompetence
- NDOW deputy director Jack Robb: criminal complaint for felony violation of NRS currently in front of the Attorney General. Criminal complaints against NDOW more generally filed by a Nevada Republican assemblyman for similar violations
- Carl Lackey: highest number of public complaints of any employee in NDOW's history
- Wildlife Commission and NDOW: currently being sued for failure to adequately regulate trapping. Current and former NDOW employees are witnesses for the plaintiffs
- Wildlife Commission: successfully sued for violations of public meeting laws; successfully sued by the Washoe Tribe in the State Supreme Court for allowing hunting on tribal lands, in violation of state treaties and federal law.
- Bear hunt every one of Nevada's 27 tribes signed a declaration opposing the Commission's approval of the bear hunt. The cost of this hunt to taxpayers is $13,000 per bear. Carl Lackey testified in front of the Wildlife Commission that the hunt would make money and reduce urban conflicts. The current director of NDOW says that's nonsense - in fact, the hunt is very expensive and urban conflicts have increased.
- Current director of NDOW: issued directive to staff to stop lying to the public, and threaten that staff who reported the lie would be fired.

very expensive and urban conflicts have increased.

—Current director of NDOW: issued directive to staff to stop lying to the public and media (that this was needed is at least as remarkable as it actually having happened)

—Lackey's bear team: highest kill rate as a % of population in North America, highest number of bear deaths due to incompetent use of tranquilizers, and the highest per-bear management cost in America.

—In 2015 the NV Senate passed a bill banning NDOW from giving hunters the release locations for game animals, including bears. That this law was needed speaks volumes to our State's wildlife management system.

NDOW and the Wildlife Commission define the need for our Constitutional fight to seek redress against our government.

According to Carl Lackey, NDOW's chief bear "biologist," bears are a constant and serious threat to public safety. So much so that we spend hundreds of thousands of dollars a year trapping, relocating or killing them. But it's ok for Carl to bring his wife and infant on a release. I wonder if NDOW's insurance covers them...

It would be like a doctor posing with his unconscious patients for the thrill of it. Very, very unprofessional, as well as dangerous.

Kyle Macgregor Everyting Carl does is very better than anything done anywhere else! He does wilderness bear training, too. Everywhere else bears are just shot under depredeation permits. And in some places in the Sierras bears do $100,000 in property damage a year and are dangerous to humans because they have no fear.

According to Carl Lackey, NDOW's chief bear "biologist," bears are a constant and serious threat to public safety. So much so that we spend hundreds of thousands of dollars a year trapping, relocating or killing them. But it's ok for Carl to bring his wife and infant on a release. I wonder if NDOW's insurance covers them....

Carolyn Stark This picture reminds me of the time Steve Irwin was holding his son near a crocodile. The difference about this is that Steve Irwin was trying to educate people about crocodiles and conserving (no hunting) them.

Carl Lackey publicly tries to scare people about bears but this picture shows completely the opposite. What a hypocrite. And Carl Lackey promotes hunting them.

Non-professionals handling wildlife is both dangerous to the humans and causes inappropriate conditioning to the bears which can later lead to their death. Having your minor children handle bear cubs while you're on the clock is a violation of NDOH's terms of employment and should be grounds for termination.

Lake Tahoe Wall of Shame At a minimum they violate both the rules of the environmental protection of public property by persons use and recreational enjoyment of the public and NCCOW rules for use of the traps (which is also a violation of his employment. IVGID has a (relatively) new trash technician on board, George Valentic, who is responsible for responding to trash calls and generally enforcing Ordinance 1, which includes a mixture of education, warnings, citations, and personally cleaning up trash spills. NDOW's bear "management" team, lead by Carl Lackey, has called George "arrogant" and resists working with him. Carl thinks George is arrogant? Pot, kettle, black are three words that come to mind. Regardless, I think it's inappropriate for Lackey or his team to publicly criticize professionals - government and non-profit alike - who are actually doing the hard, boots-on-the-ground work of trying to resolve the problems. If you agree, let NDOW director Tony Wasley know at twasley@ndow.org, and maybe copy Carl at clackey@ndow.org.

Lake Tahoe Wall of Shame Group, we need to refer to the Sheriff as Sheriff's

Can't be a "be-empower" the fact that they're not "Wid" either. A photograph I know that a "victim" but it also could "not the Sheriff" this

Lake Tahoe Wall of Shame

Jennifer, Lake Tahoe Wildlife Care uses similar protocols as Animal Arc. It seems everyone but NDOW knows that this is wrong.

With respect to the sow with four cubs, NDoW should be sanctioned and held to a truthful standard, Healy said this, "we knew that mom was a bear that was making her living within the urban interface, it called for some action,"

The truth is NDoW trapped this bear as a research bear in 2004 and was NEVER handled or trapped by them again.

They unequivocally did not know anything about her but they lied and said her life wasn't worth anything as she was a "garbage" bear. If she truly was this "garbage" bear, they would have trapped her after 2004. Even so, Healy basically says any urban bear is not entitled to live. We should not allow NDoW and their spokespeople to say, make and act in those claims
